Miracle

Southampton College Lady Colonials Try To Accomplish The Impossible

By Dan Rattiner

Friday morning, March 11, a ragtag group of seven young women got off a bus in Philadelphia to play in the annual ECAC basketball tournament. The women were mostly freshmen and sophomores, and they represented the remains of what once had been, the year before, a great college women's basketball team, the Southampton College Ladies Colonials. They had few illusions. They had come to defend the title the team had won the year before. But those that rank the teams invited to the tournament had a rating for them. In 2004 they had won. In 2005, they would be last.

Indeed, they had barely gotten into this tournament this year. Last spring, after winning this tournament to the great joy of everyone at the school, coach Pat McGunnigle began recruiting and training for the upcoming year of 2005. There were juniors returning as seniors. There was a strong new junior class. After accounting for the few seniors from the championship team that had graduated, there were a total of 12 players on the team. They would defend their title in 2005. And they would win it. Two years in a row.

> "This is the last year there will even BE a Southampton College. How do you want to go out?"

If you wanted to make it up, you could not describe worse things that could happen to the Southampton College Lady Colonials, between June 2004 and the day that the small little group of freshmen and sophomores got off that bus last week. First of all, on June 10, the President of Long Island University announced that they would be closing Southampton College in June of 2005. The upcoming year would be the last. Of course you were welcome to stay, or to transfer to one of the other LIU campuses, such as C. W. Post.

By the time the first game of the new season came around last November, all three of the new hotshot recruits who were supposed to be on the team had gone to other schools with better scholarships. Also gone to other colleges were the top scorer from 2004 and the senior co-captain. What was left for the opening game of the new campaign were these seven scrubs and Coach Pat McGunnigle. Things started badly. Then, after the fifth game, Pat McGunnigle quit. She had an offer to coach elsewhere, and she got in her car and she left.

Who could come in to coach this team for the remaining 25 games of the season? Practically the entire sports department for the college had closed up shop. After numerous phone calls, they found 28-year-old Cassie Arroyo, a physical education teacher at the college who had coached the softball team. She said she was willing to take on the task, though she had never coached basketball in her life.

The team rallied around her. What else could go wrong? After a settling-in period with the team, Cassie Arroyo caught her stride, and so did the rest of the team. At one point about midway through the season, they had won 7 of 8 games. But then two of their players were injured, and, down to just five regulars for a month, they went 0 and 4. Frankly, had any more of them been injured, they might have to forfeit upcoming games. But, fortunately, that did not happen, and they pressed on until the injured players returned.

With two games remaining at the end of the season, Cassie Arroyo had led the team to a record of 18 wins and 10 defeats. It wasn't great, and it included two losses to Philadelphia College, which had on the roster the most valuable player in the league, Samara Speakes. But with just those two games remaining, Southampton was informed they would get into the tournament. Provided they did well in their last two games, with Concordia and Bridgeport. They lost both.

Finally, the announcement came about who would be going to the tournament in Philadelphia. And there, at the end, seeded last, was Southampton College. They had made it anyway. And so they would defend their crown.

As is often the case in these tournaments, the team seeded first in the tournament starts off with an easy game by playing the team seeded last. First seed was Bloomfield College. The Southampton girls suited up and went out on the court that Saturday afternoon. And by midway through the first half, Southampton's top scoring player, point guard Leah Getz, was out with an ankle injury, and they were down by 12 points. They called a time out.

"This is it," Arroyo told her little team. "This is the last year there will be a basketball team at Southampton College. This is the last year there will even BE a Southampton College. How do you want to go out?"

Amazingly, even without Getz, the girls rallied. They took the lead. And behind Guard Amber Gooden who scored 22 points and four three-pointers, they held off a charge by Bloomfield at the end to beat them 71 to 68. They had just knocked out the favorite. And the Philadelphia crowd, happy to be rid of Bloomfield, loved it. Southampton could hardly believe it themselves.

The next day, Saturday, Southampton College found itself in the finals against the team they had been unable to beat all year, the number two seed, Philadelphia College. They would play Philadelphia before a packed house, and on their home court.

How could they possibly beat this team?

The two times they had played them during the year had been disasters. The first time, they got whomped by a score of 81 to 69. The second time, many said, they played the best basketball they had played all year. The game was tied when the final buzzer sounded, and it was tied after one overtime and tied after even a second overtime. In the third overtime, at the buzzer, Samara Speakes broke away from a defender, and, with one second left, leaped up and swished a three pointer. Final score, Philadelphia 78, Southampton 75.

"We're going to play them a bit differently this time," Coach Arroyo told them before the game.

The new plan was to play man to man, and to deny Samara Speakes the ball. Arroyo assigned sophomore forward Sarah Mahan to do the job. Then, on offense, it would be fast break, fast break, fast break.

Philadelphia never had a chance. Southampton took a ten-point lead, then a 16-point lead, and the first half wasn't even over. At one point, in frustration, Samara Speakes, after being called for an offensive foul, began to roughhouse Sarah Mahan, but the referees would have none of it. They immediately called a personal foul against Speakes. When the first half ended, Samara Speakes had a total of two points. And Southampton was ahead 31 to 22, a smaller lead than earlier in the half but a lead nevertheless. Philadelphia had made some adjustments, had figured out how to better deal with man to man, and had begun to rally.

To counter the Philadelphia charge, Arroyo came out for the second half with her defense out of man to man and into a zone. Momentarily, it confused Philadelphia, and Southampton began to pull away again. But now Philadelphia was gaining momentum and closing the gap and there was simply nothing further Southampton could do. With a minute and thirty seconds left to play, Philadelphia had closed the gap to just four points. And with less than fifteen seconds left to play they were behind by three points, 66 to 63. And they were inbounding the ball. A quick three pointer and the game would be carried into overtime.

From midcourt, Philadelphia inbounded the ball. And Southampton Kiley Lapointe stole it.

UH! GEORGE,

I KNOW YOU WARNED ME...

...but the other guy said he'd give me their special promotional price and a free seafood dinner for two.

How could you go wrong?

And I would also save a few bucks. You know how it is.

How was I to know that the free dinner would be in that hole in the ground that was supposed to be my pool.

On its own salad.

I don't know what to do. The other guy is gone. His phone is disconnected.

Now my wife isn't talking to me.

My next door neighbor looks at me and says "Grribbit, grribbit. I'm going to call the town about your frog farm".

George, please help me out.

A little far fetched?

Maybe. Maybe not.

We've been designing, building and maintaining award winning pools and spas out here for over 30 years.

Quite a few pool and spa companies have come and gone in that time.

No free seafood dinners. Just fair prices and a sparkling clear pool.

A Few Hundred Stop In Sagg For A Moment On Their Way To Canada

By Dan Rattiner

Around five thirty in the afternoon, I drove out onto Sagg Main beach as I often do, to write on a laptop, run the dogs and watch the sunset. This particular day was Saturday March 13, and, finally, it seemed to me, the winter had come to an end. We'd had another particularly nasty snowstorm in the morning, but after just an hour or two it turned to rain, then stopped, then all seemed to melt away. The temperature was close to forty. The Gods of the Weather were being kind, for the first time in five months if the truth be told.

It was very windy down on the beach. Perhaps it was the sudden turn of the weather for the better, or the confusion caused by the departure of the morning storm. In any case, the rough ocean was sending in large, slow waves which, as they broke, sent bits of golden spindrift off their tops, turning a spectacular pink and purple as the sun lay low on the horizon.

> Maybe trying to steal a fish, maybe trying to mate, maybe trying to play. Maybe just glad to be alive.

Into this situation, moving about twenty feet above the waves from the west, came what at first I thought was a very fast moving plague of locusts. It consisted of about a hundred and fifty very closely packed individuals, moving in unison first this way and then that, zipping out over the waves then in over the sand. As they approached, however, what I realized was that I was looking at a very tightly packed group of tiny birds.

To my delight, they set down almost directly in front of my car, about as tightly packed on the sand as they had been in the air. And they kept on moving excitedly and in unison, moving their tiny little stick feet rapidly so their little bodies headed first down toward the water as the surf pulled out, then back up the beach as a wave slid in. They were concentrating on something, their heads down, looking exactly at the margin where the water and sand met, and it occurred to me they were looking for something to eat. They were completely oblivious to the fact that I was there.

They couldn't be piping plovers, is what I thought. There are too many of them. They are shore birds for sure, running this way and that together at the water's edge. But what kind of shore birds? I had never seen such birds before.

It was so funny to watch them. A few of the birds would decide to run down toward the water, and then the whole flock would follow. Then somebody farthest from the water would lead them back. Or somebody almost in the water, as the flow of the surf changed, would turn around and hightail it back through the pack, knocking over those who might not have turned fast enough, sending them splashing into the water, then up and out shaking their wings.

They did this for quite some time, moving generally in an easterly direction, though sometimes west for a bit and then back to the east but more.

Then suddenly, as if at some instantaneously identifiable signal, they were off and up into the air and flying around in a little pack again. But this time they looked different. If from the west they looked like big black locusts, here from the east they looked like gold and silver pieces of jewelry. As they flew one way, then turned suddenly, they seemed to disappear entirely. Then they would turn again and turn brown, then turn again and go back to silver and gold.

From this I deduced that they must be very silver and gold on one side, brown on the other and, on edge, almost invisible. They did make a

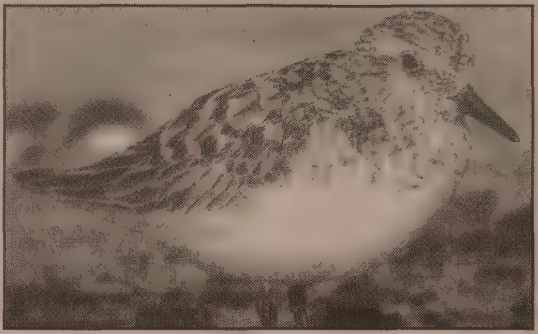
For awhile now, they circled around to the east of where I was, then they circled slowly west and then they were simply off and flying in a pack to the west, probably around fifteen miles an hour. And that was the last I saw of them.

That evening, I called Larry Penny, our local environmentalist, to ask him what I had seen. He said they were undoubtedly sanderlings, a popular shore bird that spends the winter in Central and South America, or in Florida, and then in packs makes its way, hugging the shoreline, up the Atlantic coast to Maine, where they arrive in late June, turn inland and then head further north to their summer nesting areas by Hudson Bay in northern Canada.



"They move up the coast at the rate of about a hundred miles a day. They are a very healthy, very thriving species, because they are about the only creatures that get their sustenance directly and exactly from the water's margin, following it up and down the sand as it breaks and retreats. They usually pass through eastern Long Island during the last week of March, so this is a bit early for them. Then they spend July and August by Hudson Bay where they mate and nest, then they come back down the coast the way they came up, finding their winter quarters once again in Florida or Central and South America.

"So they are not endangered?" I asked.

"Just the opposite."

"And they are just passing through."

"Yes."

The next day, at sunset, after waiting around for half an hour, I saw a family of five black ducks fly in, circle around and then land and begin bobbing around in the surf about twenty feet offshore. They'd bob up with a wave, then slide down the back, just like our surfers do. Occasionally, they'd poke their heads underwater and put their tails in the air. Found something. Dinner. Sometimes they'd frisk with one of the other four birds, chasing them, splashing around. Maybe trying to steal a fish, maybe trying to mate, maybe trying to play. Maybe just glad to be alive. I don't know. Then they too flew off.

Every day, now that spring is stirring, there is something new down at the beach.

Racing down the court with it, she made a layup with just 8 seconds left. And that sealed the victory. Final score, Southampton 68, Philadelphia 63.

After the game, there was the awards ceremony. Sarah Mahan, the sophomore who had contained Samara Speakes in that final game, was named most valuable player in the league. An award was given out for coach of the year. And it went to Cassie Arroyo. Who else?

Arroyo pointed out to reporters after the game that this whole tournament had truly been a team effort. In the final game, the high scorer had been Kiley Lapointe, who had stolen that inbound pass. She had 15 points. But just behind her was freshman Danielle Castelli with 14. Next year....

Well, there won't be a next year. Today, Cassie Arroyo has her coaching trophy in a box in her office closet. Where else would she put it? The game belonged to her players. Without them, she wouldn't have a job, she told a Southampton Press reporter. As for the big ECAC Championship Team Trophy? Where do you put that? There is a trophy case at the college gym. But in the next month or two the trophies already in there will be removed as they shut down the college.

You can't put this particular trophy in there and then have it removed. No. Not this one.

Richard Kessel and friends. Shoreham Nuclear Plant in back and to the right.

What?

They Tore Down the Shoreham Nuclear Plant, Didn't They?

By Dan Rattiner

For anybody who came of age here on Long Island during the 1970s and 1980s, the biggest event, the battle that towered over all others, was the battle to stop the nuclear plant at Shoreham.

It had started in the 1960s when the bigwigs who ran the Long Island Lighting Company announced plans to build three nuclear plants on eastern Long Island, the first on Long Island Sound at Shoreham, and the second and third also on Long Island Sound but further east at Jamesport. The island needed much more electrical power, we were told, and nuclear was the way to go. Each plant would cost about a billion dollars.

> I looked at this picture and thought:
> THEY NEVER TORE DOWN THE POWER PLANT!!! IT'S STILL THERE!

They broke ground on the first of these plants in 1972 at Shoreham, and from that moment, war was declared, with the Lighting Company, who were already charging users the highest kilowatt rate per hour in the country, on one side, and the people of the eastern end of Long Island on the other. We all thought a nuclear power plant was dangerous. And the fact that the necessary evacuation plan showed everybody on Long Island being shepherded in their cars across the bridges into New Jersey galvanized us all to action.

I recall a demonstration while the plant was under construction where 5,000 flag waving and sign carrying protesters climbed the chain link fence surrounding the construction site, and had to be teargassed and dragged off by police to waiting buses for transport to the station houses to be fingerprinted and then released. But if the protestors couldn't stop the construction, the nuclear power regulators could. The construction went slowly and the price kept rising and the regulators kept finding out that the engineers kept building it wrong. It would have to be torn apart and rebuilt. Then it would have to be torn apart and rebuilt again.

By the time Shoreham was completed and ready to open in the late 1980s, the company had run through a staggering $6 billion. Then came the melt down at Three Mile Island where a near-disaster, barely contained, occurred at the major nuclear facility in Pennsylvania, coming within sixty minutes of spewing tons of radioactive material into the atmosphere. That this information was withheld from the general public for six months and only got out when a whistleblower released an investigative report describing it, transformed everybody. It must never happen again. So Three Mile Island was shut down to never reopen again, and here on Long Island, Governor Mario Cuomo ordered the dismantling of Shoreham.

At that point, LILCO had actually started it up. The power plant had run, successfully, with SEC approval, for exactly 24 hours. Then the Governor's order came through. The plant would turn off and never operate again. And the entire $6 billion building loan, which had been borrowed from banks to be paid back by the revenue from the future power profits, would now bankrupt LILCO if nothing were done. So the Governor said we taxpayers would pay back the loan. In exchange for that, there would be two things. LILCO itself would be disbanded, and its properties taken over by a state controlled Long Island Power Authority.

Finally, Shoreham would be completely dismantled. Brick by brick it would be taken down, Mario Cuomo said, with great emotion. I remember it well. And the land upon which it had been built would be reseeded and planted and the sea creatures and herons would be invited back in. It would become a park.

To get to Shoreham, you go west from Southampton for about thirty miles, then take the William Floyd Parkway north until it ends at Route 25a. At this point on Route 25a, there is a big woods, and had William Floyd continued on it would enter that woods. Instead, you turn left, go about a half mile, and there on the right is — or used to be — a sign that said you were at the entry driveway to the Shoreham Nuclear Power Plant.

The sign is down now although the driveway is there. On the other hand, there is no reason to go down the road. There is no nuclear power plant.

I do recall that day Cuomo made his announcement. All my friends, everyone I know, said that they would like to have just one brick from the nuclear power plant as it came down. A souvenir of what we had accomplished. If we were going to be paying $6 billion plus interest for the next thirty years, we would certainly be entitled to it. But, of course, such requests were soon forgotten.

And then, last week, there was this picture on the front page of many of the local weeklies in these parts. It showed Richard Kessel, the President of the Long Island Power Authority, who has done a wonderful job refashioning the shattered remains of the old LILCO, standing in a field in Shoreham shaking hands with Sid Bail, President of the Wading River Civic Association. Behind him, there are two tall windmills, just installed and dedicated that very day, now providing safe, ecologically excellent electric power, enough power to keep the lights on for at least two hundred nearby

Robert David Lion Gardiner, 16th Lord of the Manor

Gardiner's Island off the coast of Amagansett is the largest privately and continuously owned family island in America, remaining in the Gardiner family from its founding in 1639 to the present day. Until his death in 2004, the island was in the care of Robert D. L. Gardiner of East Hampton and Palm Beach. We wrote about this colorful character and patrician millionaire in February. Among the many letters we received about our story were these two memoirs about encounters with this individual. If anyone else cares to write us at length, we will publish them as well.

–DR

Dear Dan,

Thanks for your personal reminiscences about Robert David Lion Gardiner. I, too, met the 16th Lord of The Manor on several occasions between 1971 and 1973.

In 1971, I announced my candidacy to run on the Conservative ticket for supervisor of the Town of Shelter Island. To that end, I sought whatever recognition I could from the press and that summer Gardiner ran one of his many fund-raising tours of his private island for the benefit of Southampton College. He would take us by private boat from his pier in Three-Mile Harbor to his tiny, bullheaded basin on the south shore of the island. Three pick-up trucks fitted out with benches would take us up to the manor house for refreshments and a historical overview of the island before setting out on a safari-like trip.

Gardiner, of course, conducted the overview and as you mentioned he could be a "non-stop talker." Robert was going on and on and on and on about his family, the Indians, the deer, the osprey, etc. etc. and so doing was losing the attention of his visitors. As teenagers, we as kids on Shelter Island would take outboard motor boats to the fort that lays on the extreme north-west end of the island, built to protect Long Island sound from marauding pirates, foreign gunboats, etc. The fort still had cells for prisoners, some old cannon bases etc and was, of course, adventurous to us.

The Lord of The Manor was standing on a sofa, addressing a large, aerial photograph of the entire island when I spotted a writer I later learned was covering the tour for the New York Times. I made my way to the sofa, raised my hand in front of his face and said something about… "The fort! Can you tell us something about the history of the fort?" and that of course opened the floodgates of his memory for at least ten more minutes. It worked for me; a picture and blurb followed shortly in the Sunday Long Island section of the paper.

I continued my pursuit of the supervisor's office and lost the election by twenty-six votes in a three-way race. The following year Gardiner announced his candidacy as a Conservative for Congress from the First District, taking on one of Long Island's most admired politicians, Otis Pike. The trouble was, like Gardiner on the sofa, he had no platform except to keep his island out of the hands of the federal government.

Residing on Shelter Island at that time, in Sylvester Manor, was Andrew Fiske, a direct descendant of Nathaniel Sylvester, who was a cousin to the first Lion Gardiner. Andrew Fiske, along with his charming and gracious wife, Alice, had worked as hard as Gardiner to maintain the homestead that is the centerpiece of most of Shelter Island's basic history. Gardiner then contacted his distant cousin Andrew and asked if they would host a reception in his honor as part of his campaign for votes on Shelter Island. Andrew and Alice readily agreed and it was held in their formal gardens. My family and I eagerly volunteered and (I believe that had to be 1972) of course the outcome of that campaign is well known. Otis was re-elected to the House of Representatives for the umpteenth time. And Robert David Lion Gardiner continued to fret about his island.

Then, trying again for the supervisor's office here, I ran against the incumbent and lost again. Sometime in that period of time, I received an unusual invitation from Robert Gardiner. Would I consider meeting him for luncheon "in town" (which of course is a Hamptonite's code word for New York City, he had something important to speak with me about, and I accepted. The three-hour luncheon was at the ultra prestigious Racquet and Tennis Club on Park Avenue. After carping about the congressman (Pike) through the first course, lamenting the decline of society during the entrée and revealing to me many of the realty holdings his family held (shopping malls, apartment houses, etc.) during dessert, the Sixteenth Lord of The Manor got to the point: since one of his names is David, and mine is David, and he had no children and was unlikely to have any, would I consider allowing myself to be adopted by him so that he would be able to leave his island to a "direct" descendant!

Dan, the story is true. The luncheon was delightful and none of the conversation repetitive. Was he a bore? I certainly did not think so. And he surely was dedicated to doing everything in his power to keep Gardiner's Island in the hands of a Gardiner. Probably counsel and lawyers told him that a Huschle-Gardiner adoption ploy would not work. And of course I will always remember the Racquet & Tennis Club.

Dear Dan,

Your article Gone brought back two memories of my encounters with Robert Lion Gardiner, both of which ended in a toast. The first was face to face on his beach on Tabaccolot Bay and the second I observed him from afar while sitting in the cockpit of a yacht moored in Sag Harbor. Both confirm your description of the man and his life; he was a charming storyteller and an eccentric that lived a charmed life. Let me know if any of the following is of interest to you or the press for a letter or an article.

Back in the late 60s Gardiner was gracious enough to hold a fundraiser for Southampton College. As my father was then Provost of the College I was drafted to direct parking at Gardiner's Marina on Three Mile Harbor Rd. I enlisted my good friend Ken Wright for a day of volunteer service. For $100 per person a hundred or so guests were transported to the island on a motley flotilla including a WWII landing craft. Once there, they were given a tour, some by Gardiner himself, provided with a gourmet lunch catered by Jen Berkoski of the Old Mill Restaurant (which at that time still operated out of the old water mill in Water Mill) and were treated to a fine French wine donated by the 16th Lord himself.

Ken and I caught the last boat over. Once on the island we jumped in the back of an old Ford pickup outfitted with wooden benches and began the tour along with some of the paying guests. We drove off past Goody Garlick's Pond, once the home of the accused witch from East Hampton, through the various work buildings including carpenter's shop and blacksmith shop, and made our first stop at the kennels for the Gardiner's Island Retrievers. In hindsight, I suspect these were nothing more than inbreed black labs that seemed lower to the ground than normal, but at the time they seemed exotic. After climbing back into the truck we went on down to the windmill, where we learned that when the arms were positioned in the form of a cross the folks over in Accobonac and Springs knew to expect pirates! Any skeptics in the back of the truck became true believers at the next stop; the ravine where the Gardiners had recovered Capt. Kidd's buried treasure. (Several years later I made a point to see the portion that the Gardiners returned to the King on display at the Tower of London.) The tour continued around the island through the forest of virgin 10-foot diameter white oaks. One was known as the hanging tree, as several hundred years before two branches had been tied together to support the weight of the poor soul to be hung; his crime escapes me now. Over the centuries those branches had grown together to form a branch shaped like a capital I. On we bounced along the north shore past Whale Hill, the highest point on the island that looked over Block Island Sound, on to the airport and back to the tent for lunch.

After helping clean up, Ken and I, both aged sixteen, were able to commandeer a truck on the pretense that we needed to take the trash to the island's dump. It was on the multiple trips to and from the dump and around the island giving our own version of the tour, when a plan began to take shape. We would secrete two cases of fine French wine under some garbage and deliver it to a hiding spot on the cliffs of Whale Hill. Then some weeks later we would sail back to the island from the Southampton Yacht Club in a twenty foot Lightning (and that trip is another story) and retrieve the wine! It all seemed perfectly rational to our teenage minds.

Surprisingly, all went according to plan and we arrived back at the island some three weeks later with two boats and a crew of five, having been joined by Rick Stachecki, Tony Vagianos and Ed Graygor. We found the wine and sailed around to Tabaccolot Bay to set up a picnic dinner on the beach to be accompanied by the white wine. As we prepared the meal we heard the whine of an approaching patrol vehicle. Being knowledgeable Freeholders of the Town of Southampton we fully expected to be within our rights to be on the beach below the high tide mark. But out of the jeep stepped Robert Lion Gardiner himself and he quickly set us straight . . . he owned the beach and then some. And so began a twenty-minute explanation and apology as to why we couldn't possibly stay. He wove a tale of taxes, more than $1,000 per day as I remember, liability, fire, the Osprey, the deer and the wild turkeys. He could not have been nicer or firmer and so we retreated to our boats where we raised a toast to Gardiner and his island with his wine...

My second encounter was many years later in the early 90s. We had been racing sailboats out of Breakwater Yacht Club in Sag Harbor. With the race over, sails stowed and the boat safely on its mooring, the crew was drinking cocktails in the cockpit. A southerly breeze and high tide perfectly situated us to look over the breakwater to the north. Someone spied a classic black wooden runabout speeding towards us from the channel and we realized two things; 1. The boat was out of the channel and headed towards the rocks now totally submerged with the tide (ironically we knew about these rocks having hit them ourselves sailing to Gardiner's Island some twenty+years before) and 2. It looked to be Robert Gardiner's boat the Laughing Lady. We watched in horror and fascination as he continued at full speed directly into one of the rocks. There was a horrible grinding noise and the Laughing Lady sputtered to a stop just off the entrance to the harbor some 100 yards from where we sat. Immediately his boat began to settle in the stern and we surmised that the prop had struck the rock and ripped a hole in her bottom. Gardiner, dressed in his signature blue blazer, white pants and captain's hat seemed unfazed. The water poured in and the stern went down forcing Gardiner forward. Within five minutes he had worked his way some 30 feet to the bow and now the boat was at a 30-degree angle with 90 percent of it under water. At the last possible moment help arrived, a small powerboat pulled up to the bow just as the Laughing Lady slid beneath the waves but not before 16th Lord of the Manor stepped off with two dry feet. This time we toasted him with our own rum.

March And Speeches In Southampton Against The War In Iraq

By Cindi Cook

"You should get that banner," advised a marcher, pointing to the one in front of him. It read, "War Is Not the Answer" on the front and "No More Blood For Halliburton" on the back. His read, "No War for the Empire." I ran through the crowd with my camera trying to capture the others around him: "Freedom of Speech, Let It Ring," and "Stop Cuts in Veteran's Benefits." The signs were part of a rally in Southampton putting forth peace in the face of the ongoing war in Iraq. The early spring day provided a crystalline backdrop for broadcasting a message that was clear and strong and fervent in its intent.

Rallies are meant to do just that — to stir people to action, rally them to a cause. Saturday marked the second anniversary of the invasion into Iraq. Hard to believe that two years have passed since the United States, and its various allies, made it a point to drive Democracy home in the Middle East. Commencing at 1:00 p.m., the East End Veterans led a march of supporters from Southampton Town Hall through the streets of town to Agawam Park for a rally an hour later. A group of combat veterans led by Joe Giannini and Ed Gorman, Vietnam War and World War II veterans, respectively, are trying to raise awareness on an issue they feel the media — and most people — are not paying attention to. "What I'm starting to realize is that most people are ignoring the war. The media is keeping it out of the news," said Giannini. A rally would give voice to what many still see as an unjust war, and one where the casualties are only mounting.

"We have 92 of these," said Pat Hovey of Southold, who along with Riverhead resident Justin Torter was carrying a panel of 18 photos of troops who have perished in combat. "I don't want to see any more bloodshed and am committed to bringing the troops home," she said. The panel, laminated front and back, lists the deceased in order of their demise, starting with the 2001 Afghan invasion. Printed under each person's photo is their name, the day they died, the town they come from, and whom they left behind. The entire work was to go on display the next day at the American Legion in Greenport

East End Veterans provided signs, crosses, and Stars of David for participants to carry. A week prior, the Group held a memorial vigil in East Hampton, placing small white crosses on the Town Green in front of the windmill. The sight was more than ironic, as passersby were witness to a divergence from their usual placid Hamptons scenery.

Although the demonstration on Saturday was small in size, those who came out were hardly daunted. Local resident Beverly Rood, there with son Charles Rood-Huysman and their dog Daisy, told why she came. "I think there was probably a better way to effect change — and I think we were misled." Rood's concern stemmed too from being the mother of two young sons "— not that girls can't be called," she added quickly, reflecting on the possible reinstitution of a draft that would make all young people fair game.

The goal today, though, was not to draw party lines but to wage peace. Two members of the clergy, George Wilson, a Presbyterian minister and member of EEV and Reverend Jack King, pastor of the Southampton United Methodist Church, both had a turn at the microphone. Wilson kicked off the rally by telling the crowd that they had work to do — the work of peace — and led everyone in a prayer of their own tradition. He was followed by a stream of speakers, all introduced by Giannini. Terrance Sullivan sang two songs, one in Gaelic. Helen Fitzgerald, co-chair of the South Fork chapter of the Long Island Progressive Coalition, spoke of freedom as a transformation that "cannot be forced at the point of a gun." With prepared notes, Fitzgerald brought up many of the ironies of war, and proclaimed that she was proud to be part of the demonstration.

Peter Matthieson

Writer Peter Matthieson, a well-known member of the community, then spoke. "We seem to be able to swallow no end of deception," he said. Matthieson does hope democracy can be installed in Iraq but spared little for the current administration, calling them "oil-steeped." He urged onlookers not to sit back. "We all can try to educate people in our circle of acquaintances. As gently as you can, try to inform people."

Matt Kirwin listened attentively but expressed his thoughts without hesitation. "Recently there's been a lot of coverage that everything's fine over there. You have to stop and think about all the people who have died," he said sadly. "It'll be going on like that for a while." When asked how long he thought that would be, he replied, "At this rate, there aren't going to be too many people left," responding to Italy and Bulgaria's recent decision to pull out. He emphasized that many Iraqis have also lost their lives, concurring with Matthieson who had reminded the crowd that approximately 120,000 Iraqis have died.

Blanche Wiesen Cook, a scholar and longtime activist, spoke out strongly, quoting Eleanor Roosevelt who said "governments exist for only one purpose, and that is to make things better for all people."

Perhaps some of the most poignant commentary of the day came from EEV member Ed Stateman. He enlisted in World War II in 1943 at the age of seventeen. "We were at war then, a war of survival," he proclaimed, putting forth that "the only people who really know anything about war are those giving their lives in Iraq." Stateman was bold, and suggested that if those in power think this is a war, reinstituting a draft would call everyone, "instead of just the lower-and middle class." He said further, "We as East End Veterans know what it is to fight for this beautiful country, and we're going to continue to put our names and faces forth on behalf of all the people in this grand beautiful United States."

Some Employers Take the Housing Situation Into Their Own Hands

By Jerry Cimisi

"It's a problem that's only getting worse," said John White, the director of Southampton Town's Affordable Housing Office. "This isn't Silicon Valley. Employers here don't pay high tech wages. This is still largely a resort economy and the expectation of people is that there should always be someone here for service, whether it's someone behind a checkout counter or a nurse in a hospital. But those are the workers who are finding it harder and harder to live here."

Now two Hamptons employers, both in Bridgehampton, are finding ways around this problem: onsite housing. It isn't that it has been so rare in the past for a person to live where he or she works, but Patricia Topping of Topping Farm and Christian Wolffer of Sagg Pond Vineyard are going about this old solution in a more modern way.

While salaries have gone up about 14 percent on Long Island in the last few years, housing prices have risen 80 percent.

Ms. Topping, on Mecox Road and Halsey Lane, is in the process of putting up a trailer-like structure on a foundation that will house about seven people, individuals who have worked with her for over a decade.

"They work for me ten months a year," she said. "They are all here on visas as agricultural workers. Last summer they were in temporary, portable dwellings. What I am building now is a HUD-approved, manufactured home, a double-wide trailer on a three-foot-deep foundation. It will be a thousand square feet, have three bedrooms, two bathrooms and meet all codes I am required to follow."

Ms. Topping stresses the strict legality that governs everything she does concerning this. Realizing that some people might think she was housing workers who were possibly illegal, she said, "That's something I would absolutely never do. I would never consider hiring illegal staff. I've got 55 horses to feed, 35-40 customers a day during the season to deal with; I could not do this alone, my workers mean a lot to me and I want to treat them the way they should be treated. And I also wouldn't put myself in the position of having workers removed because they were illegal."

In Ms. Topping's case it is not just a matter of hanging out a HELP WANTED sign and waiting for workers to come in the door. She explained the visa process by which her longtime workers, all Mexican, are allowed to work with her each year.

"Originally they came on what is called a B Visa for unskilled workers, but last year the government put a 66,000 cap on these visas and by the time I applied it was too late. The last year or so this has all come under the control of Homeland Security. Before it used to be the Department of Justice."

But there is also an A Visa under the Agriculture and Markets Law, strictly for agricultural workers, which is easier to get. She said, "Believe me, by I now consider myself a world authority on applying for visas for my staff. With the B Visa I would have to apply by September or October to have a worker here for the next season. With the A Visa I can apply 60 days before the employees come. I applied in Febraury. The last week in March my workers will pick up their visas at the consulate in Monterey and come here in April."

She added, "I think I am the first to install a new structure for workers. And again, this has to be approved by Agriculture and Markets Law, Southampton Town and Suffolk County." Ms. Topping said that construction was underway right now and should be ready to house her workers in April.

By the time you are reading this, a scheduled hearing will have taken place before the Planning Board for Ms. Topping's Site Plan, though she said she is trying to get it adjourned until the town votes on new legislation regarding set backs on agricultural property.

She related that new security measures since 9/11, if "often necessary for the safety of everyone, sometimes are a little extreme." She told the story of one of her workers who had a problem cashing his paycheck because the bank required two forms of ID and he only had his passport. "New York State will not give a legal alien here on a visa a driver's license, so he only had one form of ID. I had to co-sign his checks, which seems ridiculous, because, obviously, I also sign his checks." This year, her employers will be getting New York non-drivers ID to avoid any problems.

Ms. Topping made the point that what she was doing was not a solution to every business. "I was able to do this under the Agriculture and Markets Law, which would not apply to other businesses."

Christian Wolffer, of Wolffer Estates and Sagpond Vineyard, is another employee who will be constructing new quarters for his staff. He said, "I bought property near mine that had an old work camp on it, housing about 25 people." Mr. Wolffer said he was tearing this down and building a facility that will have 22 rooms, each with a bed, desk and chair and closet, and a common bathroom with three toilets, three urinals and a common kitchen area. There will be a porch, a washing machine and dryer and a couple with their own apartment who will clean and wash clothes and possibly cook. Their services will be paid for by the employees, who at this point will all be male — as is the case with Patricia Topping's workers. (Ms. Topping said that agricultural visas do not allow workers to bring any members of their family with them.)

Mr. Wolffer said with the horse farm and the vineyard together, he employs about 45 people, the majority of whom are Hispanic. (He speaks Spanish.) Prior to this year some workers had lived on his property and some offsite; he paid living expenses for the latter. "If you give people the proper living arrangements they will be good workers."

Mr. Wolffer said he plans for all this to be in place this year.

He recently met with a number of his neighbors to allay any concerns they might have about having a large number of workers living in their midst. He said, "They were concerned about the density of people on the property, and the amount of cars. I told them the property will be landscaped to hide any cars."

In response to perhaps the most concerned neighbor, who lives immediately adjacent to the property, Wolffer says, "He knew when he bought his property it was already designated to be used for such housing, even if it was not at the time he bought. I assured him I want to keep this area looking beautiful."

Mr. Wolffer said, "Ultimately the neighbors said that if I do what I say they will be OK with it."

Arthur Gerhauser, Building and Zoning Inspector for Southampton Town, said that housing for agricultural workers had to have access for emergency vehicles, "as all dwelling have to," and all structures and "accessory use buildings" have to be less than 150 feet from the front lot line and 200 feet from side lot line. Of course, a preexisting use, as in the case of Christian Wolffer, is grandfathered in.

John White, of Southampton's Affordable Housing Office, said, "It's a misconception that when you talk about affordable housing, people whose thinking is thirty years out of date think only about providing low cost housing to foreigners. This is definitely not the case.

"The median income in Southampton Town is $60,000. What that means is that fifty percent of the population is above that, fifty percent below." He added this does not take into account the person who makes a million a year in Manhattan and who has a summer home as a second residence in Southampton.

He said, "A bank will typically give you a mortgage on a home that is three times your income. In the Hamptons affordable housing — let's say housing for a family of four — is about $250,000-$300,000. So you've got to be making eighty to a hundred thousand to afford a home. Only six percent of Southampton makes $100,000 or more."

He added that while salaries have gone up about 14 percent on Long Island in the last few years, housing prices have risen 80 percent.

Affordable housing can be freestanding houses, condo units, apartments, etc. "When you say affordable housing it doesn't mean just any one thing," said Mr. White. He said Southampton Town makes use of federal and state subsidies to create affordable housing, which can be used for anything from paying a portion of the building costs to giving home-buyers assistance with a down payment."

Whether the townships on the East End will be able to retain their workers through such municipal aid is hard to say. And whether arrangements like those Patricia Topping and Christian Wolffer envision become more widespread is also conjecture. This almost seems a return to an older era, with estates that housed a large staff. The more things change, the more they remain the same.

homes. And these windmills have been built, quite symbolically, on top of the five story roof of the Shoreham Nuclear Plant.

I looked at this picture and immediately thought: THEY NEVER TORE DOWN THE POWER PLANT!!! IT'S STILL THERE! And since none of us has ever again driven down that driveway to confirm that it was torn down — why go down that driveway? — we all thought, and we have all been talking as if it has for many years now been turned back over to the herons and fish, pelicans and penguins.

I don't get it. We paid to tear it down. Cuomo announced, with considerable emotion, that it would be torn down. And yet, there it is! An entire $6 billion nuclear plant, not now working, but absolutely ready to go. And now with these two piddly windmills on its roof. WE HAVE BEEN BETRAYED!

There are other possibilities. Maybe they got a price to tear it down brick by brick, but it was another $1 billion and they didn't want to go back to the well for more money, so they just kept it hush hush that they didn't do it.

Or maybe they DID tear it down. But now the Bush Administration has secretly had it rebuilt.

This is a complete betrayal of everything that I and all my friends and all the rest of us stand for. I was one of those who demonstrated. Defeating Shoreham was a great triumph. My life has been for nothing.

What a downer.

The Sheltered Islander

By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #341

Peeple....peeple who need peeple.....

Easter is here and as everyone knows, it's all about candy eggs, bunnies and baskets. Okay... I know there's some remote religious aspect to it, but it's politically incorrect to discuss it. Just like the third top grossing movie last year didn't get mentioned at the Academy Awards because it was politically incorrect to do so.

It's time to examine Easter Peeps. Where do they come from? Why did they come? What do they want?

Peeps were invented by Sam Born, who grew up in Russia and immigrated to the United States from France. In 1917 Born opened a small candy store in New York. He would display freshly made candy in his store window, with a sign that read, "just born." He established the Just Born Candy Company and around 1954 developed a line of shaped marshmallows, the Easter PEEP!

I've never liked marshmallow candies, so over time I became a pundit of the plethora of possibilities for Peeps. So.... when you get your basket and eat all the chocolate and then dig all the red jelly beans out of the plastic grass and eat then and you're down to the Peeps, here's a few ideas for them.

Peeps are very lightweight. If you suck off the yellow sugar, you can easily stick them to the back of your brother's, or anyone's hair, without them knowing.

If you're a ten year old girl or inebriated college student, you can make two piles of about six peeps squished together and put them under your shirt to make boobs. If you make your leftover Peeps into boobs, as a woman it will save you lots of pain when you have your mammogram. At the last minute, just pull back your boob and stick that boob shaped pile of peeps between those plates. That mammogram nurse from the Torquemada School of Mammography can flatten that thing til her heart's content....

Because of the air pockets, Peeps can keep your ears warm without being blown away. Just rinse the sugar off of about five peeps, squish together and press gently against your ear. The self-sticking properties will amaze you. But what about hearing through Peeps, you ask? No problem. Just drive a pencil through the Peep pile and into your ear. It might take a few tries, but you'll get it.

Out of sticky notes? Use a leftover Peep. Write your note, suck on a Peep and use it to stick that note anywhere; on the fridge, on a windshield, on the forehead of a drunk, etc.

Peeps as flotation devices. It takes a lot of Peeps, but tie up a few hundred in a plastic bag and keep them in the boat. They can double as food if you get swept out to sea, or they can act as a nice appetizer alternative to eating a crew member if you get marooned somewhere.

Peeps can't be used for crab bait because they float. But they can be used to determine if the tide is coming or going. Don't be afraid to cast your Peeps upon the water...

If you weave a small square of paper through a toothpick and stick it in a Peep, it makes a cute sailboat. This activity will amuse small children at the beach long enough for you to get to your car and drive away.

If you need to be able to find your hubby easily in a crowd, lick and stick two or three Peeps on the back of his shirt. The bright yellow Peeps can't be missed. You can spot a man wearing Peeps through any crowd.

Remember the Today Sponge? Okay, all I'm saying is that I found another really, really great use for leftover Peeps.

Peeps as wall art. Peeps can brighten your decor anywhere in the house. Just nail small groups together to look like a bouquet, or you can spell things with them. I find that Peeps are much easier to nail to the wall than molded jello designs. And you'll always get that nice surprised look from friends when they see your Peep Art. It's quite respectable. In 2003, Marshmallow PEEPS® celebrated its 50th Anniversary with a float in the Macy's Day Parade! Plus, they have a website: Marshmallowpeeps.com, and you can join the PEEPS® Fan Club!

Ready, Set, Sew!

A Folk Art Thrives As Women Of All Generations Celebrate A New National Holiday

By Karen Lund

As the women struggled with their scrap bags and sewing machines while walking into Riverhead High School last Saturday, there were shouts of recognition as old friends and quilting colleagues reunited for a day of learning, collegiality and just plain fun. Women of all ages registered quickly for their classes and walked gingerly down the hallways to find their rooms and instructors. This was the start here on the East End of the celebration of National Quilting Day.

"It's a national holiday!" declared chairperson Angela Moller who, with her committee, put together this annual conference. She explained that the guild's mission is to bring the folk art of quilting to the community so that the craft can be passed on to future generations. To help reach this goal, one of the workshops on this national quilting day provided support and encouragement to young girls and their mothers. Other workshops supported both the novice quilter and the experienced sewer. These women cut and sewed quilt blocks and created new designs. One workshop leader helped her quilters work on a traditional Nine Patch pillow. But what all these workshops had in common was that they provided opportunities for the sewers to exchange ideas, stories and techniques.

Folk artist Rachel Clark leads a fashion show

North Fork resident Barbara Downs at a sewing machine

A special workshop was given by Rachel Clark, a renowned Nigerian folk artist living in California. With Rachel's guidance, quilters created either a small quilt or a wall hanging using Nigerian figures, designs and techniques of Nigerian appliqué After creating designs on freezer paper, the quilters transferred the design to fabrics. They then hand appliquéd the design to a garment or a quilt.

Rachel Clark has been creating wearable art since 1973 and has been teaching at conferences since 1990. Her art combines her love of traditional quilting with both personal and political sentiments. She uses eclectic fabric mixes and designs vibrant in form and color.

At this conference classes were given in the morning, and then lunch was served. In the afternoon, a fashion show was the highlight of the day. Entitled "Everybody Git Da Blues Sometimes," the show was a presentation of Rachel Clark's work. The artist provided commentary that shed light on why she loves certain colors, especially blue. The models wore Rachel's quilted pieces that she creates as "wearable art."

The Eastern Long Island Quilters Guild was founded in 1981 and has grown to support the varied needs and interests of quilters who live and sew on this part of Long Island. The guild's mission is to preserve and promote the tradition, culture and history of quilting, and its members seek to share their knowledge about quilting with each other and the general public. Monthly meetings are held at the Southold Recreation Center in Peconic, where members have the opportunity to share their skills and to give their fellow member quilters support and encouragement in their creative endeavors. The guild also offers a lending library, trips to regional and national quilt shows, monthly programs, workshops and lectures. At the guild's annual Quilt Show, which will be held in June, fifteen or more quilts will be displayed, judged and awarded ribbons.

For more information on events and guild membership, visit their website at www.eliqg.org.

North Fork ART COMMENTARY

With Marion Wolberg Weiss

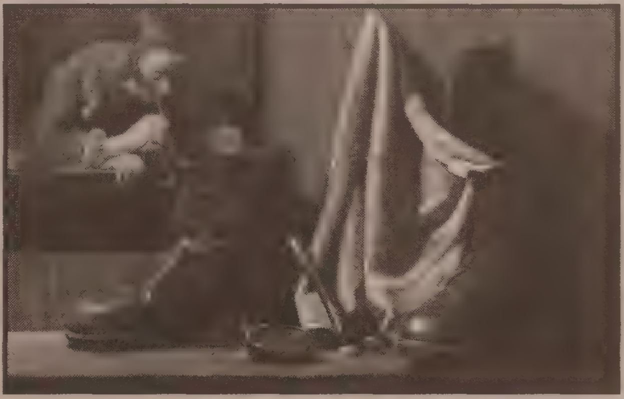
ROBERT MEHLING AT RIVERHEAD LIBRARY

We have to give the Riverhead Library a lot of credit: diversity seems to be the rule rather than the exception in its recent exhibition selections. The current show by Robert Mehling is a good example, his Old Masters' techniques not only different from past offerings by the Library but also quite well executed.

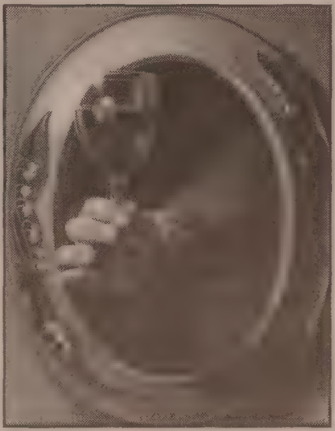
While Mr. Mehling's perspective, contrast between lights and darks, and reflected light with a strong, single illumination source remain signature traits of artists like Rembrandt, the works also recall Vermeer and the Dutch School of Art. Thus, we see Mr. Mehling's imperceptible and meticulous brush strokes, allowing the viewer to be aware of form and color.

It is form, particularly, which evokes interest and not necessarily what Mr. Mehling notes in his artist statement ("the viewer may discover hidden meanings and chance narratives"). This is not to imply that these elements are inconsequential.

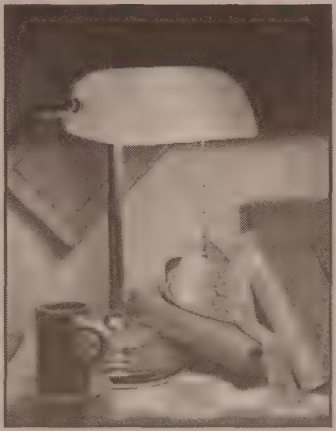
For example, the artist may be making a statement about knowledge and more hands-on pursuits with his many pieces showing books and mechanical objects. Regarding narratives, his "Blue Bulbs" recalls an old-fashioned medicine cabinet, similar to the one this critic's own father kept in his shoe store. Thus, stories about the cabinet and the past are evoked in this spectator's mind, at least.



"Shoe Shine with Chardin"



"The Glass of Blush"



"The Green Light"

Regarding shoes, Mr. Mehling features a pair of work shoes juxtaposed with a painting by Velasquez ("Late Break with Velasquez"); the piece also conjures up a "plot" because the images seem so incongruent.

More to the point, however, are the images' formal configurations. The shoes are arranged on an angle, presenting a contrast to Velasquez' rectangle painting in the background. "Hatchet and Mousetrap" is another work that juxtaposes an angular composition with a rectangle one (the mousetrap). Mr. Mehling's piece with spoons reinforces a similar placement of objects on a vertical plane.

Another work contrasts varied shapes as well, a hand holding a glass of wine placed in a circular picture frame. The effect is a more obvious three - dimensional one than the artist's other works, yet Mr. Mehling is always aiming for depth as evidenced by his background/foreground arrangements.

Regardless of recurring, contrasting composition and use of depth, the pieces are also interesting concerning subject matter: variety plays a part here, too: Mr. Mehling's juxtaposition of a luscious, lively red pepper, for example, with more inanimate objects. And then there's the work featuring two envelopes, altogether different from the artist's usual items from a past time and place.

Mr. Mehling's work will be on view at the Riverhead Library until March 31.

Visit Friuli (And Hungary) Without Leaving the Island

Bordeaux. It's the region most often used to describe our unique climate. It should come as no surprise then that many Long Island winemakers focus mainly on Merlot, one of the most important grapes in Bordeaux.

Channing Daughters Winery in Bridgehampton is delightfully different. Do they make Merlot? Sure In fact, they make a few different ones, depending on the growing season, each with its own distinctive character.

But, Merlot is certainly not winemaker Christopher Tracy's focus. And Bordeaux isn't the only region he thinks of, either. Instead, he looks east to the Friuli region in Italy.

"Like Friuli, we are a maritime, cool-climate winegrape growing region. This is an excellent opportunity for white grapes to achieve optimum ripeness, flavor and acidity levels year in and year out. The soil and the landscape of the Isonzo region in Friuli especially bears these resemblances," Tracy said. Don't believe him? Stroll through their fields and you'll see Tocai Friulano, Pinot Grigio and Pinot Bianco.

Aside from these unique-to-Long Island varietals, they also grow ligoté, malvasia bianca, and muscat ottonel.

Why experiment so much?

Allison Dubin, Channing Daughters' general manager, answered that question easily. "We are always seeking to make the absolute highest quality wines we can, and what better way to achieve the best results than to experiment? We always are striving to find what's best for our climate, our soil and our cellar."

If there's any drawback to this artisanal experimentation, it's the small production runs. Sometimes it's nearly impossible to get your hands on the wines because the best ones sell out to wine club members before being released to the public.

Of the wines that are available to those who walk into the tasting room, one of the most welcoming on the Island, a few charmers stand out.

The Channing Daughters 2004 Scuttlehole Chardonnay ($14) is a delightful white made completely in stainless steel. It's filled with crisp citrus fruit flavors and shows a nice mineral quality that you don't usually see at this price point. Perfect with local shellfish and goat cheese, it's absolutely appetite whetting.

The soon-to-be released 2004 Channing Perrine Mudd Vineyard Sauvignon Blanc ($18) is one of the stars of the portfolio. Ninety-percent of this wine is from grapes grown in Long Island's oldest Sauvignon Blanc vineyard, planted in 1975, with the other ten percent coming from equally old vines of chardonnay musqué clone. It's elegant and complex like quality Sancerre but offers some of the zesty herbal character of New Zealand Sauvignon Blanc.

If you prefer red wine, do yourself a favor and go to the tasting room right now and pick up a bottle or twelve of the Channing Daughters 2003 Blaufrankisch ($22). Grilled porterhouse steak sprinkled lightly with salt and black pepper dominates the early nose with black plum and black cherry beneath. The first sip is equally rich, with more obvious cherry flavors revealing themselves. The tannins are very soft, barely noticeable, but they contribute a spiciness that add a lot to the wine. This is an "Old World" wine with constrained fruitiness and bright acidity. Buy some today It won't last.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood In The Hamptons

The Upside Of Anger

Actors, bless their greasepaint-slathered hearts, have a way of making or breaking a filmmaker's movie, Oscar chances or overly ambitious heart. Performers like Joan Allen have made movies for years. And Kevin Costner (having survived the disastrous, sunken Waterworld) continues to do nimble and quite sensitively buoyant laps through waterlogged films, dragging them through the brine, onto sandy terrain, giving them mouth-to-mouth. In these movies (Tin Cup, etc. etc.) he's usually a sports figure gone to pasture. In the new film, The Upside of Anger, he is the "upside," as a hasbeen ex-Detroit Tigers star, who now hosts a radio show, signs baseballs, and drinks to brighten the shadowy places of relative boredom. Does he miss being out there on the diamond? – you betcha! But, is he gonna disappear into a cornfield? – no way. When he winds up on the back porch of a neighbor in the nice next-door neighborhood of the darkest suburbia, he meets Joan Allen's embittered housewife character, a mother of four beautiful young women, and he finds the downside – anger. She's a challenge and a drinking buddy. Ms. Allen brings all her below-the-surface bristling wounded hurts to the surface with every drink she has. Her husband, the lovely girls' father, has departed the tree-embraced colonial for parts unknown. The trees don't seem to miss him and, oddly, the four fine young ladies also hold up extremely well considering their circumstances. They are not mighty oaks, but, as their mom trembles with hatred like a thin aspen, they hold firm and tall with grace, while their mother, Terry, and retired jock, Denny, grow together over a three-year period.

Terry's anger beats at Denny's loss of World Series hero hurrahs. Lauding Mr. Costner's winning ability, his Denny is never pitiable or slighted. With his remarkable ability to stand up to Allen's Grey Goose Vodka-stiffened hostility, he assists her to perform her intricate magic so that, no matter how obnoxious Terry behaves as a lush, we never forget that she has been turned out by a professionally managed system that produces a suffocated, spirit-stifled species that is meant to wither and mix without notice into the surrounding woods.

As written and directed by Mike Binder, The Upside of Anger goes beyond his HBO series, Mind of a Married Man, but not past second base. The four daughters are all be-oo-tiful as played by Erika Christensen, Alicia Witt, Keri Russell and Evan Rachel Wood, but we do not get past the original wondering about how they've not been, even a bit, as war-scarred as their mother and father. The interplay between the girls, Denny and mom, Terry, has clever and glib push-and-pull maneuvering. However, it rarely gets beyond the tolerance afforded Terry because of the bitterness she's experienced. I imagine you will also give her slack for the language she tosses about. It's strapping jock, locker room parlance – as ripe as an old second baseman's mitt.

If life is essentially a deadly game, the writer/director Binder plays it that way. I will not telegraph any jolts any more than Mr. Binder himself does in his script. He's also written himself into the story as Denny's radio program producer. He, along with his big moustache, is good and droll in a secondary role. He seriously has to be applauded for his team of Allen and Costner who don't only make the game seem easy, are truly the only game in town right now.

Guy Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmy's and various film festivals. He is assisted by Sarah Halsey.

Entertainment In The Hamptons

theatre review: who's afraid of virginia woolf...by gordin & christiano

One of the most influential plays of the past century, Edward Albee's Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf, set the tone for American drama in the 1960s and brought the playwright not only his first Tony Award, but also world wide recognition. The play was revolutionary in 1962 when it debuted on Broadway. Uta Hagen's memorably fierce performance won her the Tony Award for best actress and cemented her career. The production was considered by many to be shocking, because of the sexual content and the realistic language that was deemed vulgar. When the play was the jury's choice for the Pulitzer Prize, but was passed over because the advisory board voted 8-7 against it, the controversy surrounding it only deepened.

Mr. Albee would be vindicated by going on to win three Pulitzer Prizes for drama. In 2002 at the age of 75 he riveted us with a modern day classic, The Goat or Who is Sylvia?, winning a second Tony Award for best play. He is an extremely skilled playwright with few peers. The brilliance of his dialogue is exemplified in Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?

What is particularly vivid in the writing is the continuous sparkle of aliveness that these spiritually bankrupt survivors have, that is not just clever, but grounded in an exchange of ideas which is at once dramatic as well as real. The minds of the wounded characters are engaged in a battle of wills that is urgent and immediate, making their exchanges stimulating to witness. The play has little plot, but it doesn't matter.

On the surface you would think it is about marriage, as George and Martha, one of the theatre's most famous couples, act out a sadomasochistic love affair while entertaining a younger couple, Nick and Honey, who have come to their home in the wee hours of the morning for a nightcap. The middle aged Martha adores her father, the president of a small college, and tortures her younger husband George because he has failed to live up to her expectations. She belittles him and he strikes back in their mutually sadistic relationship. Into this insanity comes a handsome new biology professor, Nick, who puts up with his wife Honey. We learn he is ambitious and married her for her money when she had a hysterical pregnancy. Ultimately the play concerns our inability to face the truth and how only by embracing it that we can hope to survive.

Mike Nichols made his cinematic directorial debut in 1966 helming the much praised film adaptation that won Oscars for Elizabeth Taylor and Sandy Dennis. Productions have appeared all over the world, but the play has not been seen on Broadway since 1976, when the playwright directed Colleen Dewhurst and Ben Gazarra.

Kathleen Turner as Martha

At 50 Miss Turner would seem a bankable and obvious choice to play Martha as she herself possess many of the qualities inherent in the character. Miss Turner gives a fully committed robust performance, but displays little nuance. She relies heavily on her deep whisky voice to embody the role. Stripped of vanity, her performance is boldly courageous. Mr. Albee's marvelous language combined with her determined will bring the lacerating Martha to life. If nothing else she is a star and it is difficult to take your eyes off her.

Bill Irwin, although decidedly miscast in the role, does well with what seems like little assistance from director Anthony Page. He remains too much the clown for my taste. Unfortunately, he is not Miss Turner's equal, and the two share little carnal chemistry, thus making it difficult to believe them as the personification of the love/hate relationship at the center of the play.

David Harbour makes a fine Nick and is physically everything that you would imagine from Albee's description. Mireille Enos is wonderfully ditzy as Honey, but appears to be doing a dazzling imitation of Sandy Dennis' performance from the film

Under Mr. Page's direction, the staging is too mechanical and I never felt a sense of danger. Everything is just a little too pat. The bitterness is on the surface, not the fuel that drives the engine. Yes, we go along for the ride, but the play's the thing and it is the playwright's magnificently inventive language that carries the evening.

Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf opened at the Longacre Theatre 220 West 48th Street on March 20. Tickets are available at 212-239-6200, Telecharge.com or at the box office.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

WHEN CONTEXT COUNTS Part III: Christo and Jeanne- Claude's "The Gates"

A lot has been written about Christo and Jeanne-Claude's recent New York installation, " The Gates." And it's a good thing, too. The creative couple has been doing unique art projects for decades, yet few people outside the art world know their work. What better place to show their endeavors than in a famous public park? Installations are often site-specific where context is their raison d'etre, and where environment determines the interaction between the viewer and the piece itself.

Central Park establishes a special yet contradictory context, both beautiful during the day and dangerous at night: romantic romps between people in love and victims being stalked by criminals. Consider some cinematic examples, like Spiderman and his lady friend in Spiderman 2 and, conversely, Audrey Hepburn running for her life in Charade.

The point is, time of day may impact on our experiences. And while seeing "The Gates" at night isn't threatening but invigorating instead, the context lends a somewhat mesmerizing effect to the installation.

Walking through "The Gates"

Central Park possesses other salient contextual factors, including climate. Snow gives the installation an ethereal effect; wind creates movement as we walked through and around the hanging drapes; it was like playing a childhood game when we tried to avoid getting wrapped up in the material.

Geography has an influence as well. As we sauntered along the Park's various paths, we experienced "The Gates" in relationship to the surrounding buildings, trees and overpasses. Entering the Metropolitan Museum of Art at 81st Street, we saw the crosstown highway: the cars speeding along, "The Gates" standing still.

We removed ourselves to experience a different kind of context, boarding a bus traveling down Fifth Avenue, seeing the installation through the vehicle's windows. We became voyeurs, passive observers rather than active participants, involved in an interactive process when we walked through the Park.

And this time we noticed formal elements we didn't see before: the frame-within-a-frame that is produced when we look out the bus window. Simply put, the rectangle composition of "The Gates" becomes emphasized, the box-like configuration exerting power.

The ride also reinforced the juxtaposition between the commercial and the aesthetic: the simply-designed "Gates" hanging near an ice cream stand where graphic design is complicated and busy, overloaded with diverse colors and shapes.

This voyeuristic viewing experience segments "The Gates" from their natural environment in Central Park, establishing another, yet equally fascinating context. Regardless of context, however, it's the "experience" of the installation which is most important, not the object itself.

Honoring the Artist: Lois Gold

Aesthetic enterprises have taken a new turn for New York resident and artist Lois Gold. While she's continuing one of her signature themes with this week's cover, "After the Rain," she has also discovered the art of poetry. Or has poetry discovered Ms. Gold? Even so, it's all related when it comes to Ms. Gold's various and energizing interests. Consider her cover, for example, where a sandy trail, blue sky and water puddle all reflect the artist's search for direction (particularly evident in her recurring images of paths). Most important, however, is the meaning behind this search, one that's not always direct but one predicated on curiosity and risk-taking.

Now such a search has lead Ms. Gold to poetry as previously mentioned; one series relates directly to well-known artists whom we assume have had an influence on her own art. Why poetry? As Ms. Gold explains, "Da Vinci once said, 'Painting is poetry that is seen rather than felt. Poetry is painting that is felt rather than seen." It's clear that Ms. Gold has taken the quote to heart.

Another quote has also changed Ms. Gold's priorities: "Art is 50% creation and 50% promotion." Who wouldn't agree with that statement nowadays? "After being an artist for twenty years," Ms. Gold explains, "I decided to promote my own work; it's become a learning experience for me. It has given me more self-confidence and has allowed me to be more business savvy."

Learning is the key to Ms. Gold's embrace of her various projects and pursuits. She speaks with pride and awe about other activities as well: her continuing lessons in ballroom dancing and her special enthusiasm for salsa and the tango; her overcoming a fear of flying.

It's Ms. Gold's aesethetic philosophy that is perhaps most intriguing, however. Again, her thinking is characterized by taking chances, and her enduring search for direction. As she notes, "In painting, I work on five or six different themes; I go back and forth. Otherwise, I'd get bored. Some of my work is abstract, some is more realistic, like this week's cover. I always like to try new things."

We can't wait to catch up with Ms. Gold in the future to see where her "path" has taken her.

–Marion Wolberg Weiss

Ms. Gold's website is: loisgoldart. com. She will be in a group show at the Quoque Library in April and a one-person show there in July. Call 631-653-4224 for more information.

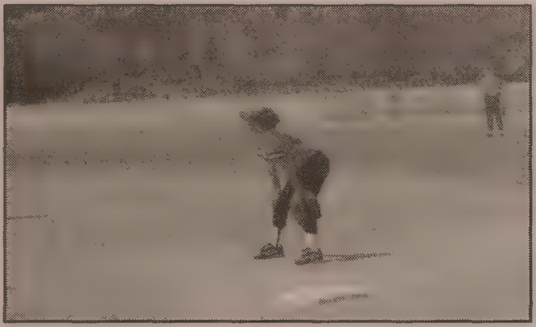
Bridgehampton's Field of Dreams



No professional hockey this year? That's all right, because it just means we can focus on baseball a little sooner. Sure there's still snow in the forecast and the winter winds are hammering down from the north, but south of here, in sunny Florida, the Yankees have picked up their bats, gloves, and free-agents to get ready for a season of redemption. We all saw their suffering (if not embarrassing) World Series loss to Boston last year and felt their shame and disappointment. It's time to forget about the past and move on. Now loaded with pitcher Randy Johnson, they hope to fill in some gaps and the strike box.

In the Hamptons, even though the fields haven't fully thawed, the idea of swinging the lumber is on everyone's minds. Sure the big talk on the diamond in the summer is The Annual Artists & Writers Celebrity Softball Game, but there is something out there for the future sluggers of America, as well. Although it may be surrounded by potato fields, instead of cornfields, this Bridgehampton diamond is still a field of dreams for the thousands of youngsters that have learned the finer art of baseball throughout the years.

Bridgehampton Baseball Camp's program is designed for 5-to-12 year old ball players of all experience levels. Emphasis is placed on effort and developing existing talent, with playing the game for fun as the common denominator. Campers are instilled with the importance of leadership qualities and about the virtues found in a good ballplayer, like diligence, positivity and hustle.

The camp's routine mirrors what you might find if you ventured to Florida during March to observe Major League Baseball's spring training. Campers warm-up together with a light jog which is followed by stretching and a series of skill sessions designed to develop proper footwork. From there they play catch. During catch, campers learn about the mechanical aspects of throwing and catching, including correct elbow angle, relaying, the crow hop, and the long hop without lollipop.

After throwing, the campers begin the "square drill." Batters work on pitch selection while using the "hands through first" method in their swing. Infielders work on techniques related to catching ground balls and turning double plays, but also learn how to use angles to reach and release the ball efficiently. Outfield practice involves communication skills, going back on fly balls and the lost art of throwing behind the base runner. Square drill ends with a water break and then it's game time.

The best thing for a young ballplayer's development and confidence is structured game action. Two, two-hour games are held each day. Campers are coached to play relaxed, yet focused on individual responsibilities relevant to their position. Campers receive advice on the many nuances involved with playing fundamentally sound baseball from a staff of professional youth coaches, teachers, and varsity high school and college athletes. Although coaches pitch during games to offer campers the best opportunity to advance their skills at the plate, pitching and catching lessons (or "bull pens") are given to those who are eager to learn the positions.

Playing baseball proficiently is challenging. Campers are reminded to be patient with themselves and with teammates when errors occur. Camp wraps up with staff observations and baseball card distribution. Major League Baseball cards are awarded to all campers based on cumulative hustle points that the campers accumulate throughout the week.

The Bridgehampton Baseball Camp runs from June 20th through September 9th from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. but also offers half-day sessions from 9 a.m. to noon. Gates open at 8:30 a.m. for extra fungo play. The camp sessions are one week long, restarting each Monday, which gives campers a chance to attend again and again. For more information and an application, please contact Eddie McCarthy at The Bridgehampton Baseball Camp (631)537-7255.

As the days get longer, and the sun shines brighter, our thoughts all turn to baseball. This summer is the perfect time for America's pastime. So bring your little sluggers down to School Street in Bridgehampton for an intense week of baseball training, education and fun. The camp also accepts walk-ins, but would prefer enrollment prior to the session's start.

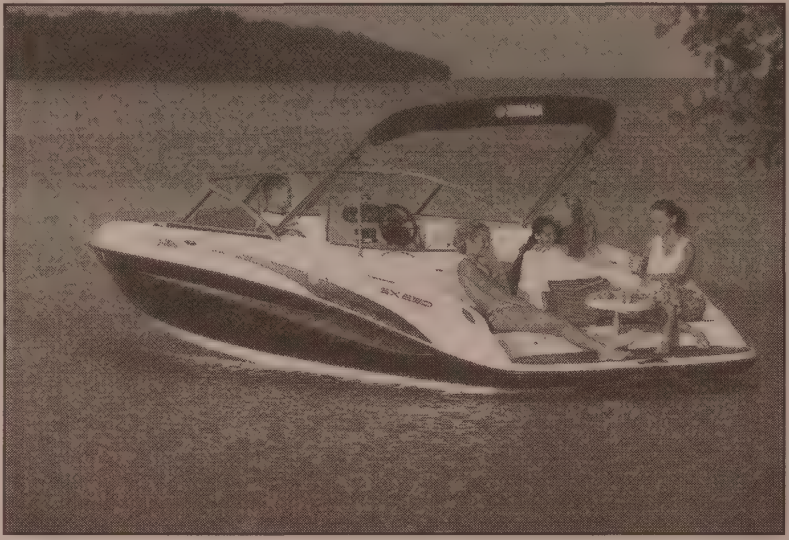
Jet Boat Camp at Mariner's Cove



Spring has sprung! Though winter's chill may still be with us, it is not too early to start making plans for summer camp. As the weather heats up so do the possibilities for outdoor fun and adventure – especially the kind that is waterfront. New to the Hamptons this season is a unique camp geared to offer your children an experience they can both cherish and share for a lifetime.

Ranking among the nation's top jet boat dealers, Mariner's Cove Marine, in Hampton Bays, is offering an educational curriculum that capitalizes on one of the things they know best – watercraft instruction safety and jet boats. The family-run marina, which is owned by the Arcate family, has been around for nearly 28 years and was, actually, the first place (at least on the Eastern coast) to rent personal watercrafts, commonly known by the trademarked name of Jet Ski.

"Kids like to learn when it's fun," said Gina Arcate, director and founder of Mariner's Cove Jet Boat Camp. "And if anything, our Jet Boat Camp is guaranteed fun with an ample measure of safety." Gina and her husband Ron Arcate are New York State Boater Safety Instructors and have clocked thousands of hours aboard jet boats. The camp is a natural addition for their marina and something they are very passionate about.

"We felt it was important to create a program that would enable us to share our knowledge – what we've learned over our many years in and around the bays and ocean with our customers. And hopefully through education [we can] help lessen the amount of accidents on the waterways," said Arcate.

The three-day camp sessions are scheduled all day on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays throughout the months of July and August for children 10 and over. Class size is limited to six students for each one-week session. As part of the camp, students will take short trips, enjoy a daily lunch, jump in for a dip in a private and protected lagoon, and all the while beef up on their studies in a supervised, fun and interactive environment.

"The goal of Mariner's Cove Jet Boat Camp is to provide the kind of safety training that enables children as well as adults to learn to use the waterways responsibly," said Arcate. "We adhere to the highest standards of safety and have developed a 'hands-on' program to enable our students to become adept, safe operators."

The course allows campers to experience first-hand jet boat navigation techniques; how to fully operate a high-tech 23-foot, twin-engine Yamaha Jet Boat; how to predict wind direction and awareness of tidal fluctuations; what to do in an emergency situation. As a result campers will be able to judge the best conditions for taking a jet boat out on the water. Students learn the full mechanics and operation of the Yamaha jet boat along with other vessels.

"Our program is endorsed by Yamaha. Each child who completes a full three-day session leaves with the confidence and knowledge that will last a lifetime. Someday they can share this with their own kids or even pass the information up to their parents," said Arcate.

Students completing the course are taught everything they need to know in order to pass the 50-question New York State boating examination. Arcate and her husband, along with the Hampton Bay Constables, administer the test at the Hampton Bays library. Upon passing the examination, students receive a New York State Boater's Certificate and become certified boaters for life.

A full-service marina, Mariner's Cove is equipped with 220 slips and is one of the country's largest dealers of Yamaha Jet Boats and Watercraft, Sea Doo Jet Boats and Watercraft, Kawasaki Watercrafts and ATVs, and Polaris Jet Boats, Watercrafts and ATVs. In addition, they are also the exclusive dealers for Fountain Boats.

Commenting on the camp's curriculum, Arcate said, "The education is priceless. I am pleased that Mariner's Cove is the only place in the world that offers this kind of in-depth education." Parents also may take a private course with their children or they may just register their children for Mariner's Cove Jet Boat Camp.

For more information, including New York State boating examination administration, Mariner's Cove Jet Boat Camp tuition, or to make reservations, contact Gina Arcate at Mariner's Cove Marine at 631-728-0286 or via email at: seeeya928s@aol.com. Mariner's Cove is open seven days a week in season, from Easter until Thanksgiving. To rent a personal watercraft, contact East End Jet Ski, also run by the Arcate family at 631-728-8060. East End Jet Ski will be open from the 4th of July until Labor Day.

Variety is the Spice of Life for Summer in East Quogue

Children's physical fitness levels are at an all time low. With the rise in home entertainment systems, computers, video games, and the like, adolescent obesity, diabetes, and other serious ailments have risen at an alarming rate. Simply put, children eat worse and don't exercise their bodies enough anymore. Even in the summer, when their days are filled with unlimited daylight and opportune weather, only an ever-dwindling number of children take to the ball courts and playing fields.

This summer, as it has in the past, Sportime of the Hamptons, in East Quogue, is offering a solution to the summer couch potato epidemic. Their summer programs are designed to allow campers from 3 to 16 years old a chance to participate in any number of athletic activities.

Their Pre-School program (ages 3-5) was created to provide instruction for youngsters in tennis, arts and crafts, swimming, court and field sports (basketball, soccer) and floor hockey. The program offers certified early childhood teachers at a camper/counselor ratio that is second to none. It provides full day (9 a.m.-2 p.m.) sessions for your youngsters. In addition there are fieldtrips to local places of interest. In the past this has included Meschutt Beach and Atlantis Aquarium.

If your child is older, Sportime of the Hamptons offers the Junior Multi-Sport Program. This unique summer package was designed for campers ranging from 6 to 14 years old and runs from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Similar to the Pre-School program, the Junior Multi-Sport package offers a diverse number of fun, athletic summer activities. Not only does it cover swimming, tennis, softball, soccer, hockey, and volleyball, but campers are also exposed to weekly sessions of exercise. Campers are taught the importance of staying fit, through cardio-kickboxing and low impact aerobics.

A third option for campers is the half day (1 p.m. to 4 p.m.) Junior Tennis Kinetics Program. This intensive, all-tennis program is designed to foster and educate tennis players at a competitive level. A staff of certified tennis instructors lead campers in informative and fun drills. The campers also compete in intra-club matches and a tennis tournament. It is designed to bring out the best in your future tennis stars.

The Junior Tennis Kinetics Program can also be combined with the Junior Multi-Sport program, allowing campers to participate in the vast array of athletic sports in the morning and focus solely on their tennis game in the afternoons.

Sportime of the Hamptons' summer program has been designed as completely accessible day camps, which feature lunch and transportation in the price of enrollment. The certified bus service offers door-to-door pick-up and drop-off of campers from Center Moriches to Southampton. The campers' lunches vary between pasta, sandwiches and pizza, but also include drinks and fresh fruit.

With sessions running from June 27th through August 26th, there is plenty of time for kids to get a chance to play a little ball and increase their health and athleticism. Campers can sign up for weekly or monthly sessions, or for the entire summer. Other interesting events are the Sportime of the Hamptons' Carnival, athletic slideshow, and a talent show for their Pre-School program.

With door-to-door service, lunch, a full day of varying athletics and instructional play this is a perfect camp for busy parents looking for qualified supervision and certified instructors to care for and teach their children.

Sportime also has a location in Amagansett which boasts 32 tennis courts and a 1,500 square foot swimming pool. They offer the same summer programs although Pre-School runs from 9 to 1:30 and the Junior Multi-Sport Program ends at 3 p.m. instead of 4. Transportation and lunches are also not provided, but the caliber of instruction is equal to the East Quogue location.

For more information please contact Sportime of the Hamptons in East Quogue at 653-6767 or Sportime Amagansett at 267-3460. Or visit www.sportimetfm.com for a full description of all Sportime has to offer and to download summer camp applications.

CAMPS & RECREATION

Where the Dream of Riding a Pony Comes True

Children love horses. They always have. They always will. They dream about owning a pony, jumping on its back and galloping away across a field full of daisies. And while the Hamptons may have fields of potatoes, not daisies, there is certainly no shortage of ponies on the East End. And if your child is begging you to buy a pony, pony camp may be the ideal first step.

The purpose of pony camp is to teach children the basics of horsemanship and horse back riding. They will learn how to handle and groom (or clean) a pony and also learn the basics of riding. Although programs vary from barn to barn, most pony camps offer a selection of programs to accommodate all skill levels. There is generally a beginner group for children who have limited or no experience, an intermediate group for kids who can walk, trot and canter, and an advanced group for kids who have their own ponies and compete in horse shows. Most pony camps focus on making sure the campers have fun, and often devote many days to playing games both on and off of the pony's back. Safety, of course, is always of primary concern to the instructors.

Most pony camps run for about three hours, several days a week, and many offer the options of either a morning or afternoon session. Camps generally have multiple ponies that they use for their camps, and students usually have the opportunity to ride each pony. This is important when learning to ride, since each pony is different and requires the rider to work on different skills.

Typically, children will begin each session by grooming the ponies and getting them ready to be ridden. Students will pick out the ponies' hooves, clean their coats and comb their manes and tails. Putting the saddle and bridle on can be difficult for young children, but the instructors are always close by to help. This initial time spent with the ponies will help the children feel comfortable and safe around the animals before they ride.

Riding in a group is a great way for children to learn, since they can learn from each other's strengths and visually observe what works and what doesn't. To feel secure while learning how to steer, make a pony stop and go forward, first time riders will probably begin by being led by the instructor on a lead rope. By the end of pony camp, these same students should be trotting, possibly even cantering comfortably on their own.

For kids who already have experience riding, pony camp is a fun way to improve their skills. Most likely they are already comfortable grooming and tacking up their ponies. Doing this with a group of friends can only make it more enjoyable. Their riding will no doubt improve. There is something about working with horses, having live animals involved, that sets pony camp apart from any other type of sports camp. Each child will undoubtedly form an attachment to a pony and will feel the need to run back to its stall just before getting in the car to go home, and slip a carrot into the pony's feed tub.

Sometimes the most enjoyable and interesting days spent in pony camp are the days that are not spent grooming, tacking up and riding. Some days don't involve riding at all. Many pony camps will schedule days when the campers can do something out of the ordinary – give a pony a bath, watch the blacksmith or the veterinarian at work.

There are even equine games – horse versions of "Red Light, Green Light," "Musical Chairs" and races conducted at the walk and the trot. Personally, my favorite memories of pony camp are of the days spent playing such games.

Pony camp is a unique way for children to do something out of the ordinary with their summer. Kids gain a sense of independence and accomplishment, because there is really nothing like being able to climb onto a 1,000 pound animal and feel comfortable and confident in the saddle. Working with ponies teaches children about responsibility in a way that few other activities do. For a few hours a day they are in charge of a living, breathing creature. And because they spend their lives being taken care of, children will embrace the opportunity to become caregivers.

Most stables on the East End have a pony camp program. Stables can be found through conventional methods such as the phone book or the Internet. Or if you happen to drive by a stable on your travels, you can always stop in and inquire about the pony camp program. In addition, the following barns held pony camps last summer: Two Trees Stables, Topping Riding Club, East End Stables, Stony Hill Stables and Rose Hill Farm.

Sleeping Under the Stars at the Ocean's Edge

There's summer camps and there's summer camping. For most of us, ocean and bay front homes are the stuff of dreams, but through camping you can find yourself spending the weekend on some of the most expensive real estate in the Hamptons.

At the west end of Southampton's prestigious, uber-exclusive Meadow Lane, on a peninsula where the Atlantic Ocean meets the Shinnecock Bay, Shinnecock East County Park offers 100 RV campsites (pending beach erosion). Although tents are not permitted, for those with a 4-wheel drive Winnebago this may be one of the most spectacular ocean front campgrounds in the country. The campsites are actually on the beach, either on the ocean or bay side. At under a hundred dollars, per night you can swim and fish on the same stretch of beach as Calvin Klein. The park is no more than ten minutes from Southampton Village, making it ideal for anyone looking to hit the shops or to grab a bite to eat. Campers can stay for a maximum of six nights. For information please contact (631) 852-8899.

If you're looking to rough it in the wilderness, Sears Bellows County Park in Hampton Bays may be just what you have been searching for. The campgrounds offer both tent and trailer camping. There are restrooms and showers, but no electricity at the tent sites. Sears Bellows Park offers a wide-ranging network of trails for hiking and horseback riding. Riders can either bring their own horses (with a riding permit) or take a trail ride from the stables. There are also swimming and rowboat rentals available on Bellows Pond. If you choose to go freshwater fishing a permit is required. Sears Bellows is located on Bellows Pond Road, in Hampton Bays, and is most easily found by locating the Big Duck on Route 24. For more information please contact the park office at (631) 852-8290.

Also in Hampton Bays is Meschutt Beach County Park on the east side of the Shinnecock canal, off exit 66 on Sunrise Highway. Although it does not offer ocean front camping it does allow for a small amount of camping and trailers and has a supervised bathing beach on the Peconic Bay as well as a food concession, bathrooms and showers.

In Westhampton, at Cupsogue Beach County Park, RVs are permitted along the access road of this 296-acre barrier beach. The area is known for saltwater bass fishing and of course ocean swimming at its lifeguarded beach. There are bathrooms, showers, a concession stand, and a first aid center. It is located on Dune Road in West Hampton, just across Jessup Lane Bridge.

Camping, golfing, hiking, kayaking, fishing, and a playground for children are just some of the amenities at Indian Island County Park in Riverhead. Just north of Route 105, the 275-acre Indian Island sits at the mouth of the Peconic River and opens up into Flanders Bay. The park is situated right next to Indian Island Golf Course, which is a beautiful waterfront 18-hole course open to the public. Known for the "island" at Indian Island, a former island, now connected by a white sand causeway, offers picnicking facilities, grills, tables, and benches overlooking the bay. For camping reservations please contact (631) 244-7275.

Heading east, Cedar Point County Park offers the best of everything. Tucked back in the Northwest Woods, this 607-acre park is accessible by land and sea. The views of Gardiner's Bay are stunning and hiking trails include a beach walk out to the Cedar Point Lighthouse, which was built in 1860. Fishing and boating are great draws for this park. In addition to outdoor activities like biking, scuba diving, and picnicking, the General Store and Snack Bar offer Saturday night movies on the lawn. Call (631) 244-7275 for reservations and directions.

Montauk offers two fantastic camping areas. Nestled between Old Montauk Highway and the Atlantic Ocean is Hither Hills State Park. The park offers great outdoor sport opportunities like volleyball, basketball and softball, and also includes hiking and biking trails plus a bridal path. Their facilities are also vast and include a laundry room, showers, a grilling area, and a general store. It is a highly sought after recreational area and the 165 spots go rather fast so book soon. Dogs allowed. Call (631) 668-2554 for reservations and a full list of everything offered.

Also in Montauk is Theodore Roosevelt County Park. The park is enormous at 1185 acres and has a little of everything including horseback riding, fishing, canoeing & kayaking, and three and a half miles of nature trails, as well as beach access. It is located on East Lake Drive, Montauk.

There's nothing like getting back to nature; spending a night in the woods, or camping under the stars with the lapping waves of the ocean resonating in your ears. For those who take to their RVs, strap on their rucksacks or are just looking for something different this summer, camping the South Fork is more accessible than you may have thought.

Kid's Love a Parade

Photos by Kelly Krieger

This year's 43rd Annual St. Patrick's Day Parade in Montauk drew a large crowd that included many adorable young enthusiasts. With each float and vehicle that drove slowly down Main Sreet in Montauk handfuls of candy were tossed through the air and into the tiny fingers of children. The wide eyes and bright smiles said it all. They were enjoying every minute of this parade.

The abundance of green attire was apparent and included everything from giant hats and dyed hair to green Uggs. It was a day to remember. Cheers to the luck of the Irish.

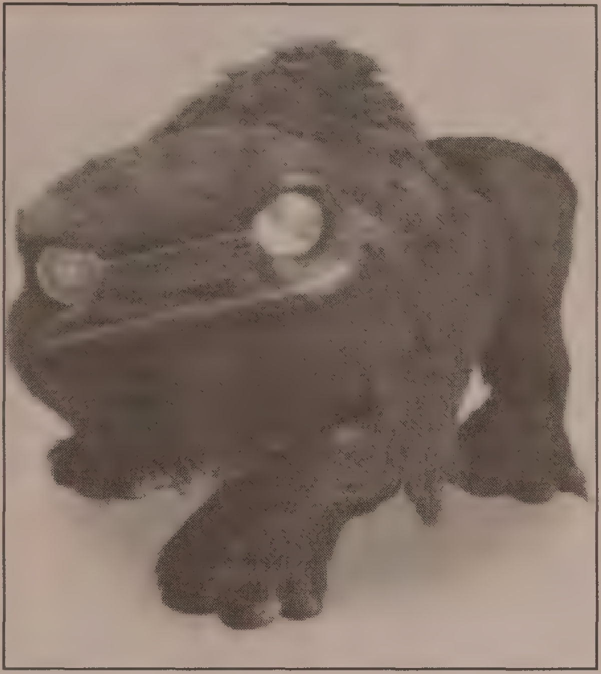
Away At School. . . By David Lion Rattiner

Esuvee

There are a lot of strange cultural phenomena I've noticed this past week. On television or at the movies recently you might have seen the esuvee ad. I was at the movies last Friday watching "The Ring Two" when the ad came on during the previews. The esuvee ad (pronounced S-U-V) starts off at a rodeo where cowboys are riding on top of this giant monster (an esuvee) and holding on for dear life. The esuvee monster, which looks kind of like a giant Snuffelupugus from "Sesame Street" with headlights for eyeballs and a bad attitude, is running around the rodeo kicking and thrashing like a bull trying to get the rider off of its back. A cowboy is interviewed on camera and starts explaining that you need to ride your esuvee carefully because sometimes they roll over. The disclaimer reads: find out more at www.esuvee.com. This is basically the entire ad. I was literally dumbfounded as to what the ad was advertising.



I realized that almost everyone else at the theater really did not get the ad either. People were saying "what the?" out loud while others were laughing at its ridiculousness. I asked three people in the theater if they had any idea what the ad was advertising. None of them had any idea. "Maybe it's a new SUV that is coming out or something," my neighbor said.

I was so curious about the ad that I decided to go to the website esuvee.com. I assumed that the website was the real key to the ad. Maybe the ad is supposed to make you curious, then gets you to go to the website, then you find out that Hummer has a new SUV coming out or maybe GM has a new one.

The website however, tells you nothing. On the website page there is just a picture of the esuvee monster growling, and some buttons. I navigated the site for about forty minutes, reading everything it had to say about an esuvee; "Do not drive them fast, wear a seatbelt, be careful around turns because they roll over." There was not one mention of which SUV they were talking about. Was this a mistake? Did the advertiser forget to put in their name?

I then did what any person does in the twenty first century to figure out what the heck is going on with something. I Googled it.

After a little research I found out that the ad is simply a safety campaign, a $27 million safety campaign, for SUVs. It was launched by the attorneys general of all 50 states. They teamed with Ford Motor Company to help reduce rollovers and deaths by educating SUV drivers. The idea was sparked in December 2002 when Ford was sued for allegedly misleading consumers about SUV safety in their ads.

Well, I got news for the advertising wizards at the attorney general's office. Nobody gets the esuvee ads. Elliot Spitzer, we love you and everything you do to combat corporate crime, but in my opinion, these esuvee ads are dumb and they make people like me feel dumb for not getting them. A Snuffelupugus on steroids running around a rodeo is not going to help spread awareness about SUV rollovers.

Speaking of steroids, what is the deal with all of the athletes in baseball that use them? I can't believe what happened at the congressional hearing for the steroid scandal. Mark McGuire was crying on national television, for Pete's sake. I simply could not believe this. After all, everyone knows that there's no crying in baseball! Somebody should have yelled at him or something. This guy is a national hero and he decides that it is okay to start crying because he is getting questioned about using steroids? Every baseball fan in America was like, "Is that Mark McGwire crying? Are you kidding me?" I do feel bad that the guy got caught up in a league that seems to promote steroid use, but to see him start crying was, to most baseball fans, like seeing their Dad cry. It was just plain weird.

The last and final thing that seems to be dominating our news is a touchy subject that I don't really want to get into. I am going to say this, however. If I ever end up in a vegetative state where I can't run around outside, talk to people, or eat, please, please, please pull the plug on me, get it over with and move on. My life pretty much revolves around eating food and talking to people so you can see that you are not doing me any favors keeping me around by shoving a feeding tube into my stomach.

When In Manhattan...BY OLIVER PETERSON

Sadness at South Street Seaport

A cobblestone street in the city is one of those rare and beautiful things that beg for me to fall on my weary knees and caress the very ground on which I tread. The smoothness of them, the implied history, is special somehow. The last time I was at South Street Seaport, I felt the reverence again. It's not just the cobblestones. In the right areas one can breathe in the twinges of a bygone New York, rolling steam from beneath the ground, wooden signs, a steely sky, and buildings untouched by Trump or progress or whatever you want to indict for the mirrored finish much of Gotham now wears. Of course, if you've been there, you're well aware that the seaport is hardly untouched by our new and user-friendly age. There's a mall, and franchise, and information booths and children and lollipops and sunglasses – a regular tourist extravaganza. But go. Go for the food, the beer, the ships and the grimy waters lapping at inveterate moorings while gulls scavenge for stray French fries creeping along the docks.

A few shops remain in the area that aren't flagships for major corporations, and schools of performers and pushcart vendors swim the busy streets during the warmer seasons. The Brooklyn Bridge looms, as marvelous a view as Lady Liberty and the harbor of boats. In college I spent dozens of hours there drawing charcoal East River landscapes, smoking cigarettes and clawing for identity, cursing my digressions to the mall for Auntie Anne's cinnamon pretzels or a gawk through Sharper Image gadgetry. Today I proclaim aversion to the GAPs of the world, yet hypocritically, it's hard to resist a good jean sale or the beckoning mannequins in the latest fashions I won't buy. Apparently, others are also not buying. The Seaport Mall has had retail vacancy problems, and projects are currently in the works to remedy the situation. Front Street is under construction, restoring 11 19th century buildings and converting them to apartments. Similar projects are also underway in other parts of the low-residency Financial District neighborhood. Ninety-five new apartments are scheduled for availability in April, and fresh and ready-for-occupancy retail spaces are supposed to expand commerce in the Seaport via more resident-based businesses. Sadly, the continued anesthetizing of Manhattan will soon oust the famous Fulton Fish Market – where hundreds of New Yorkers endured the stench and bought and sold the fruits of the sea each morning – to a less posh Bronx location, to make room for more shops. The New York State Housing Finance Authority has paid for the development with $47 million in Liberty Bonds, and the city has also provided $5 million for the $17 million restoration of the South Street Seaport Museum, also in the Historic District, as a paltry consolation. It will likely be fun and new and wonderful, but it's incredibly painful to see the pieces of the city's rich culture peeled away.

The South Street Seaport Museum is a terrific place for the whole family, and it doesn't look like it will end up in Williamsburg or Astoria anytime soon. The museum has lots to do. It's home to the nation's largest fleet of privately maintained historic vessels representing the days of the 19th and early 20th century, when the water was the preferred means of travel and shipping. At the urban archeology center, "New York Unearthed," visitors can view the city's history from before the first road was built to the present through a multitude of artifacts and examples of research tools. Currently on display at the Schermerhorn Row Galleries, "Artifacts from the Five Points" collects objects recovered from the actual neighborhood featured in Scorsese's Gangs of New York film. They are the only ones to survive from the basement laboratory in the World Trade Center. The maritime museum has all the things you'd expect and more, with events and features in constant flux. It, along with a seafood lunch before it comes from the Bronx, is a must. Get to the South Street Seaport before it's swallowed by the tsunami of sameness. Head to the financial district and the East River. For attraction locations and contact, visit SouthStreetSeaport.com, and for the museum click on SouthStSeaport.org.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

Automotive trends. In the thirties and forties, the trend appeared to be technical advancement, often focusing on the engine. Usually, the bigger and more expensive the automobile, the more cylinders and horsepower under the hood.

I was the automotive technical adviser for a television mini-series called "Seventh Avenue," a period film set in the forties. The "star car," the vehicle that is most featured on camera, was a twelve cylinder 1941 Lincoln Continental convertible. Having "rented" this car, which really means I paid the private car collector owner wads of cash, I had the use of it for ten weeks during the filming. Since it was a truly beautiful 100 point restoration, I actually felt guilty having lights, cameras and a generally non-car-loving film crew milling around its perfect paint work. However, I was able to live with and drive this beauty while filming. It certainly afforded me insight into what it was like to drive one of the finest automobiles of the era.

1941 Lincoln Continental

The Continental was a trendsetter and to this day is considered to be one of the most beautiful cars of all times. The film was shot in the dead of winter, with the car sitting in a non-heated downtown garage. It sometimes sat there for days, but every time I started it, it turned over immediately with a few slow cranks of that cold soaked V-12. It would settle in for a smooth, silent idle, with virtually no vibration. It had a three speed column shift and when cold, I would always gingerly give it a slow up clutch and tender gas pedal. It was a big car with an extremely long hood housing that V-12. The windshield, by modern standards, was narrow and the front outward view was video game-like. It seemed, from the perspective of the driver, that it was a car to be "aimed" rather than driven.

Although it had V-12 power, the Continental was slow. Like all engines of the era, it had gobs of low end torque, but seemed to run out of grunt at what must have been 3,500 rpm. This I imagined, because very few American cars at that time had tachometers. The three speed transmission did not help the speed potential, but most of the problem was probably the fact that this was such a heavy automobile. It was definitely a gas hog, but that was almost a non issue because gas was so inexpensive then. All in all, quite an unrewarding car to drive, but oh, what a joy to see, or be seen in.

Of course, in the fifties, the big trends were those two tone color schemes, tailfins and gobs of chrome everywhere. It culminated with the '59 Cadillac's bizarre two foot high tailfins that led us into the visually boring sixties' cars.

After the overly exuberant fifties, the cars of the following years were a letdown. But a trend for more horsepower began growing in Detroit. In 1964, Ford introduced a new type of car, a pony car called the Mustang. Built upon a rather primitive and inexpensive Falcon Chassis, the Mustang had bodywork that was pure design genius. Short trunk, long nose and a swoopy windshield. It had the look of a large European coupe. To this day, the 1964 Ford Mustang Fastback is considered to be one of the best looking cars ever designed. In fact, the new Mustang, which has everyone going bonkers, has many design features of the original '64, especially the Shelby version which incorporated those triangular side windows in 1965. The success of the Mustang led Chevrolet to introduce the similar Camaro and soon every American manufacturer had a pony car look-alike.

In the early seventies, American Motors introduced its Jeep Grand Wagoneer, which was a luxury Jeep, an oxymoron in those days. In England, Land Rover brought out its own version of a luxury Jeep and called it a Range Rover. Soon every carmaker started to gussy up their very basic off-road vehicles. The once "cute" little Ford Bronco grew a third larger and offered power options galore. In 1987, the British Range Rover was finally imported into America and their sales blossomed. At one point, it seemed that there were more Range Rovers in the Hamptons than in London. The Range Rover led the way to the truly luxurious SUVs, so popular today.

There is no end in sight to bigger and faster SUVs. Maybe the soaring gas prices will slow down the sales of SUVs, but I doubt it. Just as Americans have the taste for and, apparently, the money to buy, 10,000 square foot homes, they will keep buying huge vehicles, with running costs no object. Give me a Porsche or a Mini anytime. But don't go by me, I'm a car guy, not a truck guy.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Easter, a most revered event, will be celebrated this Sunday, March 27. Family and friends will attend services at their respective churches before convening at home with a celebration of food and gifts. Gifts could be baskets filled with fruits, candies and brightly colored eggs. Children look forward to the fun of dyeing and decorating eggs in a kaleidoscope of brilliant colors. The symbolism associated with eggs is related to the increase of the sun's strength and its effect on the Earth's fertility, hence the egg. It is time for renewal and a time when the unity of family and friends revel in the awakening beauty of spring.

No Easter celebration would be complete without a celebratory meal. The regal lamb or a glazed baked ham is the traditional centerpiece of many Easter feasts. Gigot Provencal is a fitting leg of lamb to season ahead and roast when ready. Asparagus, a seasonal treat, can grace your holiday table in a myriad of ways – as individual frittatas in an eggy batter, a do-ahead salad in a delicious caper vinaigrette or a ginger, sesame stir-fry.

Pavlova, a cloudlike confection, is a meringue-based dessert layered with whipped cream and a variety of fruits. It would make a delightful ending of sweetness and light to your celebratory meal.

GIGOT PROVENCAL

Have pelvis bone removed for easy slicing and the very end of the shank bone "Frenched", which removes about one and one-half inches of meat surrounding the bone for presentation.

Serves 8

1 leg of lamb, about 7-8 pounds
3 cloves garlic, cut into thin slivers
1 tablespoon fresh thyme leaves plus extra sprigs for garnish
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
2 heads garlic
2/3 cup chicken stock
1/2 dry white wine
2-3 tablespoons unsalted butter, optional

1. Remove all excess fat from lamb and have boned section of meat tied with string.

2. With the tip of a small sharp knife, make 15 or so slits all around the meat. Insert sliver of garlic and a pinch thyme leaves into each slit. Rub lamb with oil, top with a few thyme sprigs and several grinds of fresh pepper and refrigerate covered in a suitable container overnight.

Preheat oven to 450 degrees.

3. Place lamb in a shallow roasting pan. Slice tops off each head of garlic just below the surface and place cut side down on either side of the roast. Drizzle garlic heads with bit of oil, salt and pepper. Roast for 30 minutes, then reduce oven to 350 degrees for 30-40 minutes longer. Baste the roast with couple of tablespoons of stock every 15 minutes or so. Internal temperature for medium rare is about 140 degrees. Allow meat to rest about 10 minutes before carving.

4. Meanwhile, remove garlic heads from pan and squeeze out the cloves. Add softened garlic and wine to pan juices and stir with a wooden spatula to deglaze pan drippings, mashing the garlic to a puree. Add remaining stock and bring to a boil. Cut butter into small pieces, if using, and swirl into sauce, stirring over medium-low heat until slightly thickened. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Strain into a small saucepan and keep warm.

5. Carve meat and arrange slices overlapping on a warm platter. Garnish with fresh sprigs of thyme and serve with warm pan juices.

PAVLOVA

Legend has it that this sweet and airy Pavlova was created in honor of a Russian ballerina.

Serves 8

For the meringue
5 egg whites at room temperature
1/8 teaspoon cream of tartar
Pinch salt
2 teaspoons cornstarch
1 cup granulated sugar
1 1/2 teaspoons white vinegar
1 teaspoon pure vanilla extract

For the filling
1 1/4 cups heavy cream
2 tablespoons confectioners' sugar
2 kiwi fruits, peeled and sliced
2 cups mixed berries, strawberries, blueberries and/or raspberries
2 tablespoons sugar "sugar in the raw"

1. In a stand-up mixer fitted with whisk attachment beat egg whites until foamy, add cream of tartar, salt, cornstarch and slowly add 1/2 cup sugar, beating for 10 seconds between each addition. Add vinegar and vanilla and continue to beat until stiff, smooth and glossy.

Preheat oven to 300 degrees. Line a baking sheet with parchment paper and sprinkle with a little cornstarch.

2. Using a large offset spatula or back of a large spoon spread meringue to an 8-inch round building up the sides to create a depression in the center, like a free-form soup bowl. Reduce oven heat to 250 degrees and bake for 1 hour (do not open door) until puffed and a light golden brown. Turn off oven and open oven door. Let Pavlova cool in oven for 30 minutes longer. When completely cooled transfer to a platter.

3. Whip the cream in a clean cold bowl with clean whisk attachment until firm peaks form, slowly adding the sugar until cream is smooth and thick. Spread a layer of cream inside the meringue and decorate with slices of kiwi and berries, A fun time to be creative with your fruit arrangement then sprinkle top with natural sugar. Slice into wedges with a serrated knife and serve.

Easter: A Confectionery Celebration

Easter is the holiday that wakes up your sweet tooth. There is simply no better way to put an end to those winter doldrums and bring your taste buds back to life than with Easter candies.

The most sought after Easter treats are the fabulous four – the two traditional chocolate favorites – the rabbit and egg symbolizing fertility and life – and the non-chocolate choices, Peeps (yellow marshmallow chicks) and jelly beans.

The original jelly bean we love today emerged out of two separate processes. The first procedure dates back to Biblical times in the Middle East with a candy known as Turkish Delights. This was a jelly made of honey, citrus and rosewater which was heated and when hardened covered with sugar. The second came from 17th century France. Using a technique called "panning," almonds were rolled in a bowl containing a sugar and syrup mixture.

The heating method applied to the jelly and panning merged together and gave us the present day American jelly bean which premiered in 1861 by confectioner William Schraff, who placed ads to send jelly beans to Civil war soldiers.

The popularity of the jelly bean really lifted off in the 1930s, catapulting with such force that today so many are consumed they could encompass the earth three times. Their trail even went beyond the earth's atmosphere as they served as snacks aboard the Space Shuttle Challenger.

Although a newcomer compared to the out-of-this-world jelly bean, Peeps first pecked their way onto the Easter holiday candy scene in 1953. The manufacturer, Just Born, at that time could only hatch out one Peep every 27 hours since they were hand crafted.

Nowadays one Just Born Peep is made in a mere 6 minutes. This averages out to about 1.2 billion Peeps a year. Peeps really do keep everyone chirping, especially at Easter when Peeps satisfy the cravings of 700 million fans.

When it comes to Easter candy, however, nothing beats the scrumptious taste of the Classic Chocolate Easter Bunny and Egg.

The predecessor for the edible Easter Bunny was not chocolate. It was made from pastry and sugar by the Germans in the early 1800s. Chocolate rabbits first hopped onto the Easter candy trail in America in 1842 by the founder of Whitman Candy, Stephen F. Whitman.

To date, the Russell Stovers Candy Company is one of the leaders in Chocolate Easter bunny production. Chocolate bunnies can be bred with or without sugar, be solid or hollow and be created using either white or milk chocolate. The varietes seem endless – caramel, crispy rice and peanut butter to name just a few. Chocolate rabbits are irresistible – one bite and we are smitten. I dare say that there is even an art to eating them – most notably, ears first.

So who debuted first, the rabbit or the egg?

There seems to be a tie, as once again, in the early 1800s both Germany and France made chocolate eggs. Most of the eggs produced at this time were solid, rather than hollow, as they used ground Cacao bean paste which is not a very workable form of chocolate.

Out of all the eggs, the Cadbury Crème reign Supreme! The egg was first introduced in 1923, but it took until 1971 for it to evolve into its velvety, opulent state. So many Cadbury Crème eggs are generated (over 400 million annually at a rate of 70,000 per hour) that it can leave a trail covering 12,000 miles.

All Cadbury Crème egg connoisseurs can look forward to the latest member of the Cadbury holiday egg family – The Cadbury Easter Egg Delight. Get ready for the Ultimate chocolate high. This mouth watering two-layer egg supplies a double dose of ecstasy. Within the savory hollow exterior shell, there is a second delectable egg which contains a luscious yummy surprise from one of the Cadbury collections, namely, Rose Luxury, Flake Moments and Cadbury Egg. There are two sizes, small and large. However, the large egg offers the bonus of Cadbury mini eggs lying underneath it.

For confectionery lovers there is not a holiday that is more delicious than Easter. Paletes just can't wait to rise to the occasion to sample the variety of enticing treats that are available. From chocolate rabbits and eggs to marshmallow chicks and jelly beans, Easter candies are guaranteed to put a spring in your step and a smile to your sweet tooth.

C is for Cookie

"C is for cookie, that's good enough for me." That is a line from a hit song, sung by Cookie Monster of "Sesame Street." I am sure we are all aware of Cookie Monster's obsession with cookies, especially chocolate chip. But maybe that's because he lived on Sesame Street and was kept in the dark about the immense variety of cookies that exist. There are different kinds of chocolate chip cookies, as well as butter, shortbread, meringues, macaroons, twice-baked cookies (such as biscotti), tuiles and lace cookies. Then there are the all time classics: pecan sandies, palmiers, and black & whites. I cannot recall ever seeing Cookie Monster scarf down a black & white cookie. Indeed he is deprived.

There are also the ever so popular Girl Scout cookies, which we've recently been bombarded with here at Dan's Papers. Thin Mints were the obvious favorites, but that didn't stop many employees from ordering more than one box of different varieties. Popular Girl Scout cookies include: Thin Mints, Samoas, Caramel de Lites, Peanut Butter Patties, Tagalongs, Peanut Butter Sandwich Do-si-dos, and Shortbread Trefoils. Thin Mints are their best seller, amounting 25% of the total Girl Scout cookie sales. Girl Scout cookies are not too difficult to get hold of; almost everyone knows someone who can locate a Girl Scout, and the cookies range from $2.50 to $4 a box.

Since the 1930s, the most popular cookie used to bribe Santa has been the Oreo. Oreo cookies have to be the reason why milk is essential with cookies. When I eat an Oreo, it brings back memories of sitting at the kitchen table with my great-grandmother. I would drop an Oreo in the glass of milk, let it get soggy for about 6 seconds, and then scoop it out with a spoon. I was allowed 4 Oreos in one sitting (if my mother left the room great-grandma would sneak me more). Drinking the delicious Oreo-milk concoction at the end was the best part. More recently, after a late night venture to the grocery store, my friend Kristen and I sat down with our nostalgia-filled cookies to an episode of Sex and the City.

Animal Crackers were an exciting part of visiting my Popou's (Greek for grandfather) house. The box, equipped with a string handle, was convenient to run around with. To this day, every time I walk past the colorful little boxes in the cookie aisle, I think back to the half dollar I found inside every box he gave me. I was very disappointed when, years later, I purchased my first box of animal crackers on my own and realized that they did not come with money inside.

A fresh baked black and white cookie is my long time favorite. My mother used to purchase one for my little sister and me to share. I can recall waiting on line and then pressing my face up against the glass as I gazed at my reward for being a "good girl." Our giant cookie would be split in half, which worked out perfectly, because my sister liked vanilla and I only wanted the chocolate side. The sweetness of the frosting in combination with the soft, cake-like cookie has got to be why black & whites are so delicious.

Tates Bake Shop in Southampton is well known for its cookies, and has perfected the all-time favorite, chocolate chip. Kathleen of Tates Bake Shop started baking sweet treats over 20 years ago, selling cookies from a little stand to make summer money. Tates cookies are every Dan's Papers employee's favorite. We get our fix right next door at Bridgehampton Country Market. To find a location near you that sells Tates cookies, call 631-283-9830, or check out Tatesbakeshop.com. You can even purchase Tates' creations right on the website.

Enjoying delicious "homemade" cookies is simple these days, because many companies offer cookies pre-made, right out of the refrigerated section of the grocery store. All you have to do is place them on a cookie sheet, slide them into the oven, and you still get the smell of delicious warm cookies in your home without all the fuss. But if you don't feel like turning your oven on, just indulge yourself with a box of Oreos.

Harvest On Fort Pond

11 South Emery
Montauk, NY
631-668-5574

This past Sunday, at the end of a long festive day at the Montauk Parade, my friend and I were famished. We decided to grab a bite to eat, and Harvest Restaurant on Fort Pond seemed like the perfect spot. Upon our arrival we were greeted by Harvest's hostess, Laurel, and escorted to a lovely table against the window overlooking the water.

Our waitress, Jackie, took our drink order and informed us of the nights specials. I selected a glass of Lenz Chardonnay and Denise opted for her "usual" glass of Merlot. (If Denise was dining with Miles Raymond, the character that Paul Giamatti portrays in the movie Sideways...he would have left immediately.) But being neither Miles nor a wine expert, I didn't take offense and continued to peruse the menu. The portions at Harvest are served family-style and can serve up to four people depending how hungry you are.

For starters we noshed on some warm crisp bread with virgin olive oil and fresh Parmesan cheese. Up next was a crispy goat cheese and mixed green salad with a grilled Portobello mushroom. The combination of the warm delicately toasted goat cheese and fresh greens, perfectly coated in light vinaigrette dressing, was refreshingly delightful. In addition we ordered their grilled panchetta shrimp. Several jumbo shrimp sat on a bed of white beans and finely chopped (cubed) corn, peppers, tomatoes and onions dressed in subtle vinaigrette and were sublime. I could have finished the entire dish on my own, but unfortunately we were sharing. A few other tempting dishes included a bruschetta with mixed seafood, grilled marinated lamb ribs, and a selection of grilled pizzas prepared with an array of topping combinations.

While were were finishing our appetizer and salad, the soothing sounds of Irish bagpipes filled the room -- and then they appeared with the Grand Marshal himself. Henry Uihlein was stopping by for a quick drink at the bar (I believe they visited every watering hole and restaurant in Montauk that day – I heard they were checking on the quality of beer.) And as quickly as they came, within 15 minutes, they had marched through the dining room and on to the next location. It was truly the perfect intermission in the middle of dinner.

Just as they left, our entrees arrived. Our main dinner selection was a difficult choice, but we were both intrigued by the Porterhouse steak with green peppercorns, garlic and shallots accompanied by a side order of fresh spinach with mushrooms and shallots. Our enormous steak was pre-sliced and prepared with fresh roasted garlic cloves and onions marinating in their own juices on the serving dish. The meat was tender and rich with flavor. Each morsel of garlic and onion added an extra layer of mouth-watering delight. And since it was served with spinach, we managed to stay on our South Beach diets. We could not possibly finish the entire steak and decided to wrap the leftovers for our friends who couldn't join us. Several other standouts, like the pan seared swordfish steaks served with spinach in a beurre blanc hazelnut sauce, the grilled marinated lamb T-bones with polenta and escarole, or the penne with sautéed asparagus, mushrooms and marscapone cheese are also quite popular among patrons.

As for dessert, we were too full and let's face it, the night was still young for two Irish girls (actually, I'm only half Irish and Denise was Irish in spirit that day). Instead of dessert, I opted for a glass of Port to finish off my meal, warm my tummy and to prepare for a bit more celebrating.

Although we passed on dessert, they are not to be missed, with an assortment of decadent selections.

An evening at Harvest is always a highlight for me. Each time I visit I'm more impressed than the time before. Excellent service, a casual-elegant atmosphere and fresh quality food can never be disappointing. Next time you're in the mood for an enjoyable dining experience to share with one or several people, make a reservation at Harvest. I can't promise the bagpipers, but I can guarantee a wonderful meal.

–Kelly Krieger

Real Estates

by Diane Strecker

There is no getting away from it; people are intrigued with East End real estate and the people that own it. Aside from Hollywood, it seems there are more celebrities here per square-mile than anywhere else in the country, particularly during the summer months. Just about anybody who is anybody has a home, visits, or summers in the Hamptons. In my research this week, I found a very amusing website that advertised a weekend in the Hamptons complete with a "lifestyles of the rich and famous tour." A tour, I couldn't believe it, but there it was.

The tour boasted a ride past the favorite antique shop of Martha Stewart. It also includes a ride along the Southampton oceanfront mansions where a guide points out homes of celebrities and influential people. It seems the occasional visitor to the Hamptons has become enthralled with our resident celebrities and their homes. And, why not? There are some pretty impressive names on that list.

After all, Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy Onassis grew up spending summers in East Hampton on her family's estate. Andy Warhol had a celebrity enclave on the ocean in Montauk in the early 70s that really put Montauk on the map. It is worth $45 million today. Dick Cavett bought and rebuilt Tick Hall one of the famous Seven Sisters, a 100-year-old historic home on the cliffs that share the same name. Not far from there, Paul Simon built a home. Let's not forget the list of homes that either are or were owned by Billy Joel and Christie Brinkley collectively over the years. There was the East Hampton Estate (sold to another celebrity, Jerry Seinfeld), a Shelter Island waterfront with deep-water dock for Billy's sailboat, and a custom-built North Haven home. There is also a huge parcel of sound front land on the North Fork dubbed the Billy Joel property because he once owned it. The parcel has been broken up into 3-acre parcels that are selling for about $3 million each.

Let's not forget that Marilyn Monroe once summered here. Jackson Pollock lived and painted in the Springs. The value of some of this real estate is staggering. Just recently in Southampton a 5-acre piece of oceanfront land went for a record $20 million. This shows us the obvious that you have to be at least rich, if not famous. The list goes on. There is Alan Alda, The Hiltons, Denise Rich, and P. Diddy. Steven Spielberg, Kelly Klein, & Martha Stewart just to name a few are all on Georgica Pond, where some of the most expensive real estate in the country lies. Property here brings big bucks as we saw when the Burnt Point Estate sold for $45 million a few months ago. The historic 44-acre Maycroft Estate and mansion in North Haven sold last year for $20 million. The 14-acre Water Mill estate Villa Maria got 4 offers this week after only being on the market for 2 weeks and two of the offers were above the asking price. The sisters of the Order of St. Dominic have accepted none. Town officials and the Town of Southampton are making efforts to purchase the property for preservation with tax revenue and funds from the Community Preservation Fund.

And speaking of celebrity, in New York this past week, Britney Spears just reduced the price of her East Village 4-story 3-bedroom, 4.5-bath loft style apartment to $5.25 million. She paid $3 million in 2002. Other famous residents in her building have been Keith Richards, Cher and Tom Cruise. Who knows, maybe she'll buy a house in the Hamptons.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Consider a Palm Tree this Year

When people think of palm trees they generally think of tropical islands, warm, balmy breezes, and frothy drinks. This is, perhaps, the classic association with palms. Despite this association, palms make great garden specimens in East End gardens. They can be grown as container cultures, but also survive outdoors year-round if the right varieties are selected and appropriate care given.

Exotic palms of all sorts are regularly cultivated on the East End as annuals that are discarded at the end of summer. One palm, the Chinese Windmill Palm, is capable of weathering our winters and is a reasonable, challenging specimen for the courageous gardener.

The Chinese Windmill Palm, technically named Trachycarpus fortunei, is a member of the Arecaceae family of plants. This family includes all palms and has approximately 2600 species. It also includes the popular house plants labeled as philodendron.

The Chinese Windmill Palm originates from China, where it grows in mountainous areas and sustains wintry periods of snow, ice, and freezing weather. It is considered hardy to Zone 7b, where it can sustain temperatures of about 10 degrees F for brief periods. Specimens are sometimes seen as far north as Washington, DC.

In our Zone 6-6b, the palm will survive outdoors with special winter protection. It needs particular care during the deep-freeze months of January, February, and March.

The Windmill palm is slow growing and takes years to reach its mature height of about 25 feet tall. On the East End, the tree will grow to about 12 feet tall. It is a magnificent garden specimen that produces a hairy, fibrous trunk and heavily cut palmate leaves of up to four feet across. The leaves are medium-to-dark green and arranged in circular swirls. The palm provides a singular point of interest in the landscape. It is also moderately salt tolerant and withstands salty breezes near a shoreline.

Successfully growing the palm outdoors is challenging. If you are like me, the idea of successfully growing an alien plant here is very appealing, not only because the palm is unusual in our location, but also because it attests to a certain level of gardening skill.

If you decide to try it, begin by purchasing a one-to-two foot specimen during late spring/summer from one of the local nurseries, or via the Internet. Plant the palm in a large container to provide ample legroom for root growth over several seasons. Prepare the container by placing stones on the bottom for drainage and fill the container with a loamy, rich soil that has been tempered with some sand, composted manure, and peat. Once planted, water the palm well and keep moist. This palm likes moisture and reacts negatively to being overly dry or wet.

Position the container in a sunny location (avoid placing near a pool where it will receive intense direct sun). The palm will thrive in this situation with monthly fertilizing from June through October.

Cultivate the palm as a container plant for the first three or four growing seasons until it reaches a height of about three feet. Bring the palm indoors or place in a greenhouse during winter. Reduce watering/fertilizing during winter, but never let the palm dry out completely.

In late spring of the fifth year, prepare a hole in a sunny garden location at least twice as wide as the container, but no deeper than its depth (the top of the container soil should be level with the surrounding ground). Position the palm and its soil in the hole and backfill. Water and fertilize monthly to help the palm take a strong hold during this first growing season.

In late fall, construct a wooden frame around the palm, mulch heavily, and cover the frame with clear plastic. Secure the plastic all around. It is also a good idea to place a heating coil over the mulch to keep roots from freezing. Heat the coil from December through March. (This provides an environment slightly warmer than outside temperatures and helps the palm establish itself.)

After three growing seasons, the palm should be adequately established to survive without the framing, and with mulching alone. Of course, it is always a good practice to protect the palm from biting winter winds.

A specimen growing at Rock Cottage has survived three winters and is now about five feet tall. It seems to be thriving and provides a special point of garden interest. Combined with yuccas, and cycads that are relocated from the greenhouse, the palm always receives rave reviews.

Skin deep with Samantha Altea

Spring has sprung, or at least that's the rumor.

This year, I, for one, am loving most of what I'm seeing, but in order to get a handle on the inside track I went straight to our favorite fashion designer/personal style consultant, Pamela Bouchard. One chat with Pamela and I was drooling, checking the weather forecast by the hour (for soaring temps) and rushing to book my ticket for fashion.avenue.

Spring is the "to be continued," time, she told me. It's a new twist on some old favorite looks that we've all worn and loved. Pamela says that spring offers an evolution of years gone by, rehashing last year's trends, but with the addition of new pieces that stretch it all just a little bit further. This spring, designers don't want to scare us with anything dangerously new, or boringly old. Instead, '05 offers reassurance, a comfortable feeling as well as an exciting trip around the world.

The mantra for spring is world travel. But no need to fly away, because most collections right here have gone global, showing influences from countries like Morocco, Africa, Asia, India and Greece. The look isn't purely ethnic, however; it's more about combining ethnic elements with familiar components, ones that we are very familiar with, but adding a wonderful new twist.

The first big item is the jacket. Trenches, in all lengths, are a must and look great paired with a hot crop pant. Like last season, the fitted crop jacket is also a big influence. So that crop tweed jacket we all loved in winter and fall also makes its way into spring, but in lighter, brighter colors and fabrics. Get your hands on a hot new item, the safari jacket, combine it with other key elements, like denim, or white pants and you won't actually look like you're "on safari," honest. Crop pants are still huge, but this year, we're also seeing big cuffs on the pant. Denim, with a big, cropped, rolled cuff at many an ankle and pants in all lengths, even to right under the knee cap are some new choices.

White and denim are the new black for spring and summer, with white as one of the biggest influences of the season. But there's also a lot of floral and animal print. Feminine chiffon and lightweight cottons give that crisp clean and romantic look we all know, but we'll see them with unusual new twists on accessories. Like a chunky, hard, casual belt coupled with lightweight cotton. The season is about mixing soft with hard. Sturdy belts on delicate dresses lend toughness to a super feminine look.

Whilst on your travels, you might also like to stop off in Asia, because east meets west this spring, too. Feel free to mix Asian inspired clothing with familiar favorite pieces. Skins, from zebra to leopard, and jungle foliage, from delicate posies to bold blossoms, influence prints. Brightly colored optimistic flower prints stand alone, but can also be clashed – mix stripes with flowers and even prints. Many items are bejeweled, from knit tops to Moroccan inspired tunic tops with embellishments around the neckline.

The empire waist top, or dress, flatters most shapes and draws inspiration from Greece and you'll see a lot of it, adds Pamela. It's an easy to wear staple that looks great. The bohemian look is also back, but not in a flower child hippy kind of way, it's more of an urban gypsy look with a Latin influence, and the gypsy/Spanish skirt is a key item for spring. But team it with a structured shirt or crop safari jacket for a fresh look.

Accessories are just as fun and eclectic. Shoes are reaching new heights, so don't even think about stepping foot without a wedge sandal. Flat-soled lace up sandals, even ornamented flatties will be a must, too. Bags have turned into the ultimate accessory of self-expression. So go bright, beautiful and bold this year. Bags in all varieties compliment the influences in clothes from a trot around the globe. Bangles are a must have accessory, as well as lengths of beads. Layer chunky bangles, big strands of chunky jewelry and long pendants. The more strands the better. Y necklaces are also statement pieces. Scarves and accessories around the face replace heavy make-up and hair-bands tame sleepy head, bohemian looking hair.

Stamp your fashion passport as much as you like this season. Next stop, spring make-up…next week.

Bracelets that Benefit

People of the United States donate more to charity than those living in any other country. That is surely an inspirational statement, one that makes you feel good about living in our beautiful country. Sadly enough, there are still many people who don't do much of anything in the way of donating money, or their time, to some local or national charitable organization in need. As Americans, we are fortunate enough to have many options when it comes to giving; some that take only a few seconds- and a few dollars.

Lance Armstrong recently came up with the creation of a simple silicone bracelet with the words "Live Strong" written on it. People everywhere are now wearing his bold yellow bracelet to declare their support for his public battle with cancer. 100% of the proceeds made from selling these inspirational accessories are donated directly to cancer patients, to help improve their quality of life. You can get your sporty yellow statement at www.nike.com/wearyellow.

It's a creative blend of fashion and charity, as these rubber bracelets are seen on people of all ages, including the celebrities we see on TV. Armstrong had sparked the rubber bracelet phenomenon. These bracelets are versatile; they can be worn while running a marathon, or while attending school or working in an office. They are ultra comfortable, almost unbreakable, and the color you choose to wear is determined by the organization you'd like to support.

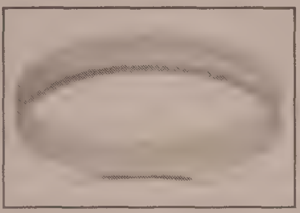
Wherever you choose to wear your subtle, yet powerful statement, you are sure to be joined by many others who like you, have chosen to accessorize for a needy cause. People everywhere are scooping them up, and not just one at a time. Green bracelets have been spotted on the arms of people who support those affected by the tsunami, and there are pink bracelets to support the struggle against breast cancer. Pink has been the color selected to represent the fight against breast cancer, because it is feminine, while also considered healing, and soothing. Recent surveys taken have shown that the pink bracelet has become more popular than the pink ribbon we've all seen. You can buy your pink breast cancer bracelets at Target, where they are sold in packs of 10, and 100% of the proceeds go directly to the cause.

Locally, a young Long Island jewelry designer, Lynne Gogel, has taken it upon herself to give to this much-needed cause. She has expanded her handmade jewelry line to include a beautiful collection of Breast Cancer Bracelets. It all started when the Fact Foundation (a Long Island based non-profit organization that creates awareness and raises funds for breast cancer research, www.factfoundation.org) asked Lynne to make some of her unique jewelry to raise money at one of their fundraisers. She jumped at the chance, having just supported one of her closest friends through a breast cancer scare, and has been raising money for the foundation ever since. A portion of the proceeds from Lynne's beautiful Breast Cancer Bracelets goes to the Fact Foundation. You can view her elegant designs at lynnique.com or contact Lynne at lynne@lynnique.com to have your special purchase shipped directly to you.

Buyer, beware! When it comes to selecting accessories for a cause, please do your research. I went to a few different sites to check out where and how to buy these rubber bracelets, and was a little hesitant. I learned that some sites were selling them for $4, while giving only $1 of the proceeds to charity. It makes you wonder- are they exploiting an idea that started out as a good thing, when these bracelets probably cost just pennies to manufacture? If you aren't going to take the time to make sure your cause gets the most, skip the silicone and send your money straight to the charity of your choice.



Local and national organizations have been doling out t-shirts, hats, bandanas, stickers, and all sorts of gear that will motivate people to get involved. Bracelets are just the latest, and shouldn't be the last, of ways for you to display your donations. After you've decided how you will give to a worthy cause, urge others to get involved as well. With these recent (and stylish) innovations, there should be no excuse why anyone can't lend a hand-or even a wrist.

NATURE LOVER

Dear Dan,

I can't wait to read each issue of your paper. Your articles are brilliant and often hilarious. What a treat to read your paper.

In the March 11, 2005 issue, an article entitled Blah in the second paragraph you state… "Soon it will be April. And you know what they say: April comes in like a lion and out like a lamb". Well, the people who say that are wrong because here goes the right saying: "March comes in like a lion and goes out like a lamb" and "April showers bring May flowers."

Now I don't think I am wrong because I grew up in Brooklyn and we all know that a tree grows in Brooklyn.

BROADWATER BREW-HAHA

Dear Dan,

The three dozen or so hardy souls who braved the frigid winds of Long Island Sound at Wading River several weeks ago, to demonstrate their opposition to the liquid natural gas facility proposed by Broadwater Energy for the Sound, have accomplished their purpose they have started the ball rolling. Specifically, about 300 people or more gathered at the East Wind Caterers at Wading River on the evening of March 10, to speak as one voice in their opposition to the LNG project, now universally known as the Disaster in the Making. Among the officials present were Kenneth LaValle, Phil Cardinale, Nick Caracciola, Dick Amper, and officers of the U.S. Coast Guard and representatives of Connecticut. Everyone there agreed the two states were united in their opposition to the project.

I was disappointed, however, that not one representative of Broadwater was present to witness our rage and filed questions from the audience. I was equally disappointed to hear members of the audience question those on the dais as if they represented Broadwater, even after they spoke in opposition to the project. The looks on their faces showed their surprise at being expected to know what an engineer knows about LNG. One lady vented her anger to LIPA over a wrong she experienced some time ago, which left everyone speechless.

Another woman informed the gathering that it costs the taxpayers of Boston $80,000 each time a tanker delivers its cargo of LNG to Everett, Mass. My son, a computer draftsman who has been living and working in Boston for twenty years, confirmed this to me by phone that same night.

The meeting, aside from giving us comfort in numbers, has not, I am sure, put a dent in Broadwater's plans. All they really have to do, it seems, is get Washington's OK to proceed with the project.

The following story ought to show why it is important for everyone to get involved.

In 1985 my wife and I moved into an apartment at Hanover Square in lower Manhattan, just south of the Seaport. From our twentieth floor windows we could see a magnificent building which was unoccupied and boarded up. It was twenty-three stories in height at the corner of Beaver and William Streets. At the corner of the building facing the intersection, was carved into the very stones a bas-relief of a winged victory worthy of Augustus Saint-Gaudens. Across her Grecian tunic she held a banner reading 1898. It was quite a skyscraper for 1898.

One morning I noticed workers starting to erect scaffolding around the building. I was told by one of them that the building was due to come down. With my old Rolleicord, I took the last photos before the building was covered with the scaffolding and demolished in due course.

In what proved to be a vain attempt to save the beautiful structure, I was told by the Landmarks Commission that they knew the building very well and that it deserved to be landmarked, but without community support there was not much they could do. I was also told that the developer who owned it had paid the highest price on record at a city auction – $11 million.

I also spoke to Christopher Gray of the New York Times who quickly wrote an article, using one of my photographs in it.

All to no avail. I watched the structure come down day after day; noting with amazement that it was built entirely of marble. The Corinthian columns that rose three stories around the base of the structure were solid marble, not just a covering of marble.

I was happy to learn later that the developer who demolished the building lost his money because the city did not permit him to build any higher than the twenty-three stories he had so selfishly destroyed. I thought that was poetic justice indeed. The site has been an ugly parking lot ever since.

All of this is to show, hopefully, that unless we turn out in vast numbers to oppose this project, the LNG facility will indeed be built. By then it will be too late to remember that the environment we live in is the only one we will ever have.

What can I say? –D.R.

Police Blotter

Dead Ringer. According to Riverhead Police reports, a car parked in the Tanger Outlet Center parking lot was broken into and thieves made off with a platinum wedding band valued at $850.

Tied One On R-e-a-l Tight. A driver cruising by Bay Street near the Corner Bar in Sag Harbor phoned authorities to report that a woman was lying in the road. Commenting on the situation, police told reporters that the woman, who was extremely inebriated, was taken to Southampton Hospital for observation.

Pirated Loot Recovered At Sea? When word got out that he was wanted for questioning, a Captain Bligh wannabe up and turned himself in to police and confessed to some mighty fishy doings. Apparently $3,500 was stolen from Molnar's Landing Marina and Bar in Hampton Bays. Police investigating the burglary interviewed several neighbors and learned of a car seen in the area, which led them to the accused. In addition, trace and physical evidence was discovered at the scene. The pilfered loot was quite possibly in the safe that police divers pulled from the water near the Lobster Inn in Shinnecock Hills.

Mum's The Word…It appears a car that was originally reported stolen was really only "borrowed." However, the borrower somehow forgot or perhaps didn't want to tell the owner. A car, left abandoned on the shoulder of Hands Creek Road, turned up belonging to a Whiteville, NC resident. Apparently the owner's cousin took the car without his knowledge and when he ended up getting the vehicle stuck in the mud…left it there.

Masked Bandit Makes Getaway On Two Wheels. Yep, in the annals of crime this week an assailant wearing what was described as a "Scream" Halloween mask burst into the Old Town Service Station on Hampton Road waving a handgun. Under duress, the filling station attendant was forced into the bathroom where the perp ordered him to hand over the money from his pocket. The service attendant was then taken into the station office and was told by the robber to give him the money from the cash register as well. Securing the cash, the masked bandit escaped into the night on a bicycle. Shortly there after, according to Southampton Village Police reports, a Coram man was arrested and charged with criminal use of a firearm and two counts of robbery in the first degree.

When A Wall Doesn't Get In The Way of Good Nap. After a particularly "good" night on the town, a Montauk man apparently drove his car into the bathroom wall at the Mobil Gas Station in Water Mill around 7:30 in the morning. Not one to let a "wee thump" deprive him of much needed sleep – the driver then took a nap. Authorities found him slumped over the wheel with the car still running. Police told reporters that when they attempted to rouse "sleeping beauty," he attempted to dash from the vehicle and a brief struggle resulted. He was later subdued and removed from the car. Charged with driving while intoxicated, he was arraigned before a Southampton Town Justice.

Costly My-stake Avoided. Stakes marking the boundary between two Brick Kiln Road estates were moved by about five feet in the wrong direction over the course of several months. One property owner had the stakes installed to make a fence line. The adjacent property owner denies any wrongdoing.

Certainly Not Avon Calling. Two thugs attempted to break into an occupied home on Main Street in Riverhead. The occupant reported to Riverhead Town Police that the men tried to force their way in and then demanded money. When the resident called police, the perps fled. Though shaken, she was unharmed and subsequently no money was taken. Anyone with additional information is asked to call Suffolk County Crime Stoppers at 1-800-220-TIPS or the Riverhead Town Police at 631-727-4500.

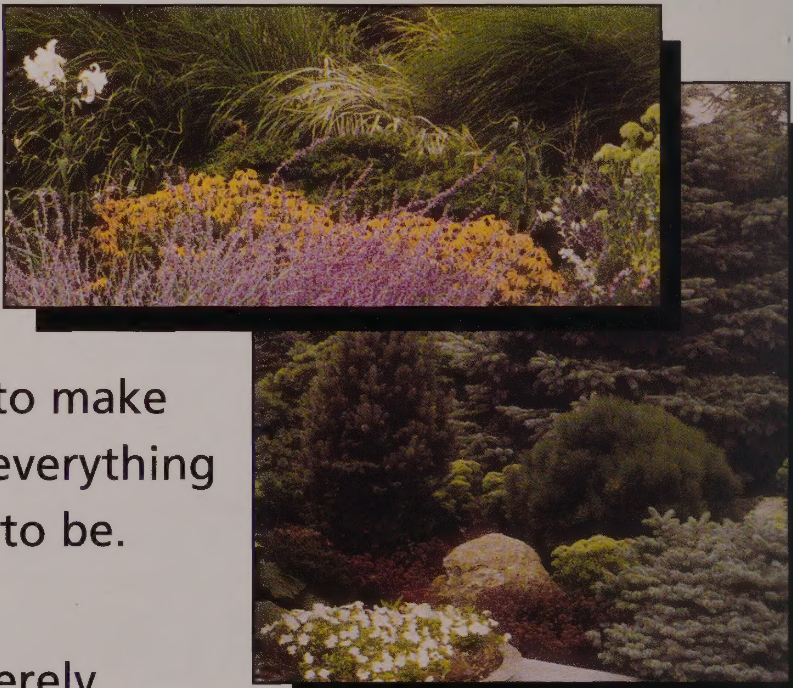
Allow me to introduce myself. My name is Brenda Barclay. I own and operate a landscape design/build firm which has been centered in the Hamptons for over 10 years.

We specialize in providing truly creative solutions for your landscape.

We approach each project individually, helping you to create interesting and exciting places to play and entertain.



In an effort to expand, we would like to offer you the opportunity to meet and create a design sketch of your property at no charge. Allow us to make your home everything you want it to be.

Sincerely,
